4 "The D.I." (1957) Produced and directed by Jack Webb, starring Jack Webb

Whether it's some no good punk who murdered someone after reading a Flaubert story or a thinly disguised Timothy Leary type guru, when Jack Webb would launch into one of his scathing diatribes there simply wasn't a more repulsive yet, hilarious human being on television. He was the conscience of the Nixon Era's 'law and order' mentality. Some have called him an autuer. His directorial style was bizarre at best. Two or three cameras were practically nailed to the floor. There was little movement by the camera (that would be dramatic) and the actors often mindlessly read their lines 'cold' off cue cards or teleprompters (otherwise the actors might get dramatic). Webb told TV Guide in 1972: "as for a definite style, all I can say is that the only thing we've always insisted on is an economy of dialogue. We like a clean script, not too much verbiage on the part of the officers." Unless of course it was Webb's own dialogue. In that situation, after listening to the pathetic whining of some guttersnipe our hero would launch into a barrage of scowling, mean spiritedness that would make Don Rickles envious:

To a kid on LSD who thinks he's a chair: "You're real far out and groovy aren't ya?"

To a child molestor: "I've dealt with you before and when I did it took me a month to wash off the filth."

To a guru who gives out acid: "will you be holding the poor kids hand at two in the morning when he's lying in the gutter vomiting?"

And to a filthy punk kid who cites Huxley as a justification for drug use: "I've read Huxley; he experimented with LSD under a doctor's supervision and the total amount of LSD he took in all his experiments amounted to less than most kids take for a single trip. Now I've heard an awful lot of propaganda about the way the right kind of sugar cube can expand your mind. Son, if you wanna expand your mind pay a visit to your public library. You try the library boy... you'll discover the place
