

Chernobyl still concerns Lincolnites

Although Sayood did not drink the tea, it would have been fairly safe.

"We brewed it fairly strong. To be affected you would have to drink a couple of hundred cups," Grimm said.

Because students do not usually have things tested in his office, Grimm considered this a "one-time deal."

Testing for radioactive elements in produce sent from home is rare here because only a few Eastern European students attend UNL. Peter Levitov, director of International Educational Services, has had no reports of international students coming into contact with radioactive goodies sent from home.

But Wieslaw Szydowski, associate professor of mechanical engineering, has many concerns. Szydowski came to the United States from Poland in 1983. Although he was in the United States when the Chernobyl disaster occurred, he was worried for the people in Poland, including his older son living in Warsaw.

"I was scared," he said. "Initially the information available made it look like a big disaster."

Although Szydowski has never received any produce from home to cause concern, he worries about the possible long-term effects of radioactive poisoning.

"I don't know how strong the radiation is. I am far from understanding that area of science. I am worried about long-term effects such as cancer," he said.

Though it has been more than a year and the panic has subsided, Szydowski said he thinks the people of Poland are still worried.

"I don't think they're sure everything is over. People are sensitive because they don't understand," he said.

One issue they may be sensitive about is the effect Chernobyl had on Poland's economy. Szydowski said a large portion of Poland's income is from exports. Exports detained because of the Chernobyl disaster resulted in a loss of income.

Tywanua Paul, consumer affairs officer of the Food and Drug Administration, said the FDA, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Customs Service and the Environmental Protection Agency routinely monitor commercial shipments exported from eastern European countries affected by Chernobyl.

"Customs officers who receive commercial shipments from eastern European countries that will be put into retail distribution will call the FDA," Paul said. "They check to ensure the shipment meets FDA safety and labeling regulations."

Individual shipments, like Sayood's, are still subject to FDA regulation but are not routinely inspected for incoming produce. They are only inspected from time to time.

Any tainted shipments from eastern Europe enroute to Nebraska would probably be detained at ports of entry, Paul said.

Sex educator says teen contraception is important

By Tim Borchers

Just saying no to kids isn't good enough when talking about sex, a sex educator said Thursday night.

Parents should deal with all issues, including contraceptives when talking about sex with their kids, professor Sol Gordon told a crowd of about 75 educators and parents at Lincoln's Planned Parenthood.

Gordon said a double method should be enforced when dealing with kids. If kids won't refrain from sex, he said, parents should encourage them to use contraceptives.

'Sexpert' Gordon stresses need for intimacy and true love

Gordon's presentation was sponsored by the Educational Department of Lincoln's Planned Parenthood. He received his Ph.D from the University of London in 1953. He has served as professor of child and family studies at Syracuse University and is currently the director of The Institute for Family Research and Education.

His lecture in Lincoln dealt mainly with the issues he believed should be taught in any sex education course.

"Just saying 'no' is hypocrisy," he said. "We know our kids will make mis-

He said sex should be ninth in importance in a marriage, with intimacy being number one and a sense of humor number two.

"Sex education should be learning about love," he said. "There is no connection between sex and love. People have sex every day that hate each other."

"We must distinguish between immature and mature love. Sex is never a test of love," he said. "Immature love, he said, is marked by meanness and violence."

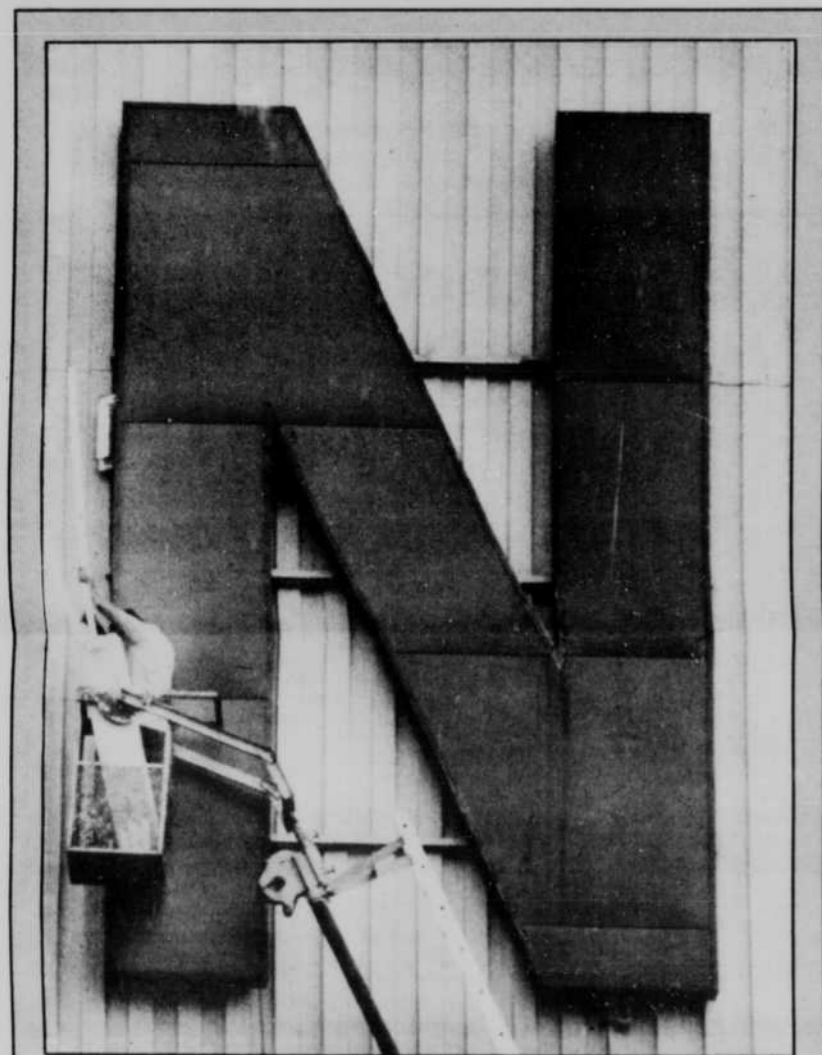

"We must get the message across early. It would revolutionize society," he said.

'There is no connection between sex and love. People have sex every day that hate each other.'

RHA approves budget, officers to get nothing; $23,475 allotted . . .

By Shawn Hubbell
Staff Reporter

Peg Kalvoda, RHA treasurer, said by paying the executive officers, it would help entice more quality people to run for the positions.

But others disagreed. Christopher Lehan, Harper RHA senator, said that although more residents might run for a paid position, "I think they'll have dollar signs in their eyes," he said.

Ken Libby, RHA speaker, agreed that executive officers should not be paid. "I'm here to learn, to experience and for the friendships that will develop," he said. "The money has no value."

Russ Johnson, RHA president, said if officers were paid, then RHA members would be less reluctant to let lazy officers keep their jobs. He said he felt in years past, some RHA members should have been kicked out of the committee, but said senators were reluctant to do so.

All the money comes from a $5 resident fee.

The original bill allocated $850 for executive officer salaries. But that portion of the bill met stiff opposition from residence hall senators.
