Lieurance lets bias discolor his stories

Thank you for printing Ed Higgins' letter (DN, Sept. 4) criticizing the journalistic incompetence of Charles Lieurance, super reporter and underground pop culture icon. It is true that Lieurance has a good set of creative writing skills, but he suffers as a journalist because he is unable to separate personal bias or fact from opinion.

My criticism is based upon fact from opinion.

My criticism is based upon the popular belief that good journalism presents a clear set of facts to the reader and opinion is saved for the editorial page. Lieurance has obviously overlooked this fact and lets his personal bias discolor everything he sees through his Lennon spectacles.

Mr. Editor-in-chief, please review your overstuffed file cabinet of similar complaints and honestly evaluate the performance of Lieurance. It's been said before, "Save the trees, keep Lieurance out of print!"

Reader outraged at Goodman's slur

I would like to complain about the sexist slur found in Ellen Goodman's editorial (DN, Aug. 26). Goodman wrote: "The Dubious Equality Award is sent annually to women who have proved that they can be just as piggish as men." Imagine the outrage had she written, "The Dubious Equality Award is sent annually to men who have proved that they can be just as bitchy as women." Such a sweeping disparagement of "men" or any other group reveals a hostile and bigoted attitude — an attitude Goodman apparently would have us believe she abhors.
