The Brothers Karamazov.

Karamazovs practice 'spontaneity'

By Charles Lieurance
Senior Editor

Although Dostoevsky probably never perceived his grand novel "The Brothers Karamazov" as grand vaudeville, the troupe of juggling clowns who call themselves "The Flying Karamazov Brothers" have taken some of the wind out of the author's hyper-serious sails.

The Flying Karamazov Brothers will perform Sunday at 4 and 8 p.m. in Kimball Hall.

A cross between the Marx Brothers, Monty Python's Flying

Circus, Firesign Theatre and medieval court fools, The Flying Karamazov Brothers have juggled whole raw chickens, punned rankly and savagely violated audience safe space around the world for a decade now. Juggling shameless childishness and sophisticated esoterica, the Karamazovs — not brothers, incapable of flight and hailing from California instead of the barren steppes of mother Russia — are anarchists. Before anyone alerts the local screws, let it be known that "anarchist" here means those who operate at the loosest, least-controlled end of any term.

By verbal comedy, the Karamazovs mean lines like "Time flies like an arrow, fruit flies like a grape" and "If Euripides, then Eumenides." By juggling, the Karamazov's mean taking sickles, dirty diapers, tea kettles, water balloons, squids, flaming sticks, eggs and hammers, and putting them into graceful orbit around the artist's head.

Anarchy.

In this day and age, when people feel they have to be sophisticated and financially agile, it's nice to
