

Bird range set at park

By Brent Hintz and Mick Dyer
Staff Reporters

More than 236 documented species of birds make their homes throughout the year at the Chet Ager Nature Center in Pioneers Park. Some of the birds, including birds of prey, waterfowl and songbirds, make only brief stops on long migratory journeys.

Mabel Ott is the nature center's resident bird-watching expert. Ott has banded more than 165 different species of birds as a federal bird bander. She said people of all ages and physical abilities can watch birds.

"Bird watching can take as much time and effort as you want," she said. People can watch birds anywhere, with only a pair of binoculars and a field-guide, she said.

People watch birds for a variety of reasons. Some just want to look at birds. Others get more involved, identifying birds and studying habitat and behavior. Many bird watchers keep life-lists of every species of bird they have observed, she said.

Ott said Nebraska's centralized location makes it an exceptional region for bird watching. Many migrating birds travel through the state twice a year. Birds inhabiting primarily the western or eastern regions of the United States are often seen in Nebraska.

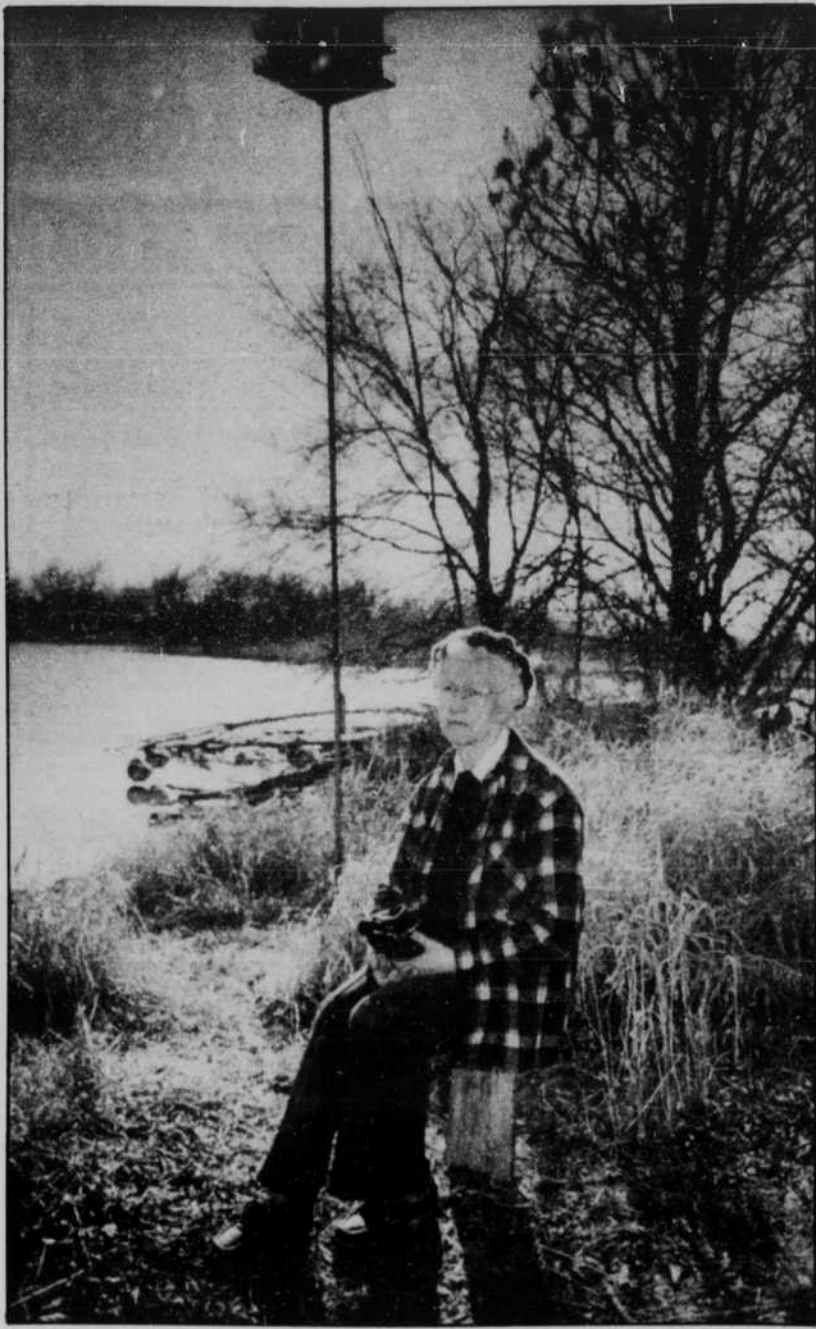

Canadian geese are currently the main attraction at the center. Flocks of geese take off and land near small ponds at the 58-acre center during the morning and early evening hours. Geese can be observed throughout the day from a "nature lodge."

The center sponsors tree nature walks at 2 p.m. every Saturday and Sunday afternoon. Groups of eight or more can make arrangements for bird watching tours with a guide at the center by calling 471-7895.

The center will sponsor "A Woodland Holiday" at 6:30 and 8:30 p.m. on Dec. 5. The cost is $1 per person and preregistration is required. Call the center at 471-7895 for more information and to preregister.

Fleetwood Mac cancels concert

The Fleetwood Mac concert, scheduled for Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Omaha Civic Auditorium, has been cancelled.

According to a spokesperson at the Civic Auditorium box office, the concert was cancelled because of "an illness in the group."

Ticket refunds are available where they were purchased.
