'Fresh Aire' gets boosted by new-age movement

In 1976, Omahan Chip Davis received the Country Music Writer of the Year award for composing the music for C.W. McCall's hit song "Convoy" and writing the musical score for the film of the same name.

In 1985, Mannheim Steamroller founder Chip Davis received a Grammy Award nomination for the Fresh Aire Christmas album, portions of which will highlight four nights of Mannheim Steamroller performances at Omaha's Orpheum Theatre on Dec. 22, 23, 26 and 27.

If this sounds like a "which of these things is not like the other" quiz on Sesame Street, it's probably because Davis' 15-year recording career has run a versatile and eclectic musical gamut.

Davis also founded of the prestigious independent recording label American Gramophone, and composed TV music for the 1984 Olympics and radio music for an NBC Radio Network Bicentennial special in 1976.

Although long regarded as one of the founding fathers of new age's grassroots conquest of a lucrative musical market, Davis said he's ambivalent about applying the label "new age" to Mannheim Steamroller's music.

"Being called one of the founders of new age is neat in some ways, but I'm not sure if it really applies to in form, and Mannheim Steamroller's music is very classically structured." But with the advent of successful new-age record stores and popular new-age racks in conventional record stores, Mannheim Steamroller has profited from the trend.

"New age has had tremendous impact on our record sales," Davis said. "We didn't really fit into a category before — our compact discs might be in the classical rack at the record store, our cassettes under rock and our LPs under easy listening — which, as you know, is sales death."

Davis said the success of new-age and fusion stations like The Breeze in Minneapolis and The Wave in Los Angeles has also played an integral part in giving the Omaha-based group a solid base of fans around the nation and making the first Mannheim Steamroller Christmas album come up just slightly short of platinum in year-end sales.

Record reviewers have classified the Mannheim Steamroller sound as everything from "bubblegum Bach" to "new classical genius," but Davis said his own view of the music is much simpler.

"It's just meant to be enjoyed by those who enjoy it. It's very unassuming," he said. "The structures are classical, but even in classical structures there are a variety of forms, styles and rhythms. I consider classical music sort of an architectural model for the music, but from a rhythm standpoint, I also see elements of Toto and Supertramp in the compositions."

Abroad, Mannheim Steamroller releases are marketed the way they were first marketed in the United States — as expensive high-fidelity demonstration albums. Davis said a distribution deal is in the works for European distribution of the Fresh Aire albums.

Mannheim Steamroller's Orpheum Theatre Christmas shows have become an Omaha tradition, and Davis said he is glad hometown support of the music is still strong.

"I look forward to these Christmas shows all year," Davis said. "They usually sell out for every show."

"The Orpheum is kind of home base," he said.

The Orpheum show will include a high-tech visual display as well as crystal-clear sound, Davis said. The concert is billed as an "Electronic Fantasy" and will include selections from the six Fresh Aire LPs as well as popular Christmas selections.

Performances will be at 8 p.m. on Dec. 22 and 23. Shows on Dec. 26 will be at 2 and 8 p.m. and on Dec. 27 at 2 and 7 p.m. Tickets cost $17.50, $15.50 and $13.50, and can be purchased at Younkers TicketCenters, TIX and the Civic Auditorium Box Office.
