Documentary shows Glass in top form

by Geoff McMurtry
Staff Reporter

Philip Glass has been a major voice in modern American classical music for the past decade and a half. His work has usually been called brilliant and revolutionary, but has occasionally been disparaged for its repetition.

Glass is generally credited by his peers as an exciting and innovative composer, a summation with which even his rivals and harshest critics agree. "There's no question that for a classically trained musician, Phil's music drives you nuts. In Holland, an orchestra actually mutinied, and had to be forced back into the orchestra pit by a court order," says conductor Christopher Keene in one of the film's many conversations with
