— "The Hound" by Hekakontalithos, based on the short story by H.P. Lovecraft

Somewhere deep in the heart of Lincoln, something evil lurks. Something powerful, something deadly. Strange noises can be traced to a house, down some stairs and into a dark basement. This is where a band practices, but it is not a usual Lincoln band.

It is Hekakontalithos. And these guys are for real, a fact that will scare almost anybody.

"If your idea of punk is some paisley-covered R.E.M. clone or your idea of metal is dressing like your favorite Motley Crue stud, Hekakontalithos will teach you a thing or two about true rock 'n' roll rebellion," said vocalist, bass player and chief songwriter Jeff Kohl, setting down a beer.

"We want to play as fast and mean and heavy as possible. That's all there is to it," Kohl said.

Along with drummer Stu Hall and guitarist Jason Debus, Kohl succeeds fairly well in creating a mayhem that any "real metalhead," as he so aptly puts it, would die for. The music is fast, frenzied and psychotic. Kohl's tyrannic vocals and winding bass lines collide with the crashing drums of Hall and de-ranged whinings of Debus on guitar
