U2, Springsteen and Houston walk away with Grammys as Little Richard steals show

NEW YORK (AP) — U2, the Irish band with a passion for politics, won twice at Wednesday evening's 30th Annual Grammy Awards for their 12-million selling album "The Joshua Tree," and declared, "This is just the beginning." Paul Simon won record of the year honors for "Graceland," the title track from his South African-influenced album which won the Grammy last year for album of the year.

But Little Richard upstaged everyone as he hijacked the nationally televised ceremony for several frantic moments, declaring that he had won the Grammy for best new artist. "I have never received nuthin' — y'all never gave me no Grammys, and I've been singing for years," declared the man who sang "Tutti Frutti" and "Good Golly Miss Molly." "I am the architect of rock 'n roll," he shouted, and the crowd roared approval.

After again announcing that he had, in fact, won the award, Little Richard revealed the Academy's choice — Jody Watley, a Madonna sound-alike from the old dance band, Shalamar.

Bruce Springsteen won a combined male and female rock vocalist category with "Tunnel of Love."

"Somewhere Out There," a ballad written by veteran songwriters James Horner, Barry Mann and Cynthia Weil for the animated film "An American Tail," won as song of the year.

"We wrote it for the mice," Weil said.

U2 guitarist The Edge, born David Evans, pulled out a list as he accepted the Grammy for best rock group with vocal "The Joshua Tree." He thanked luminaries such as Martin Luther King Jr., Amnesty International, Bob Dylan, Jimi Hendrix, Archbishop Desmond Tutu, Dr. Ruth Westheimer, Morris the Cat, President Reagan and college radio stations.
