Grace lands basketball coaching job at Cornell College

Tim Hartmann

Senior Reporter

Former Nebraska basketball graduate assistant Gary Grace's enthusiasm helped land him the coaching job at Cornell College.

Steve Miller, the athletic director of the NCAA Division III school in Mt. Vernon, Iowa, said Grace was interviewed by a committee comprised of four faculty members and four members of the physical education depart-

"He just impressed everybody on the committee," Miller said. "The members loved his enthusiasm, he's young, and he fits our needs as far as the teaching aspect."

Miller said Grace will teach several recreation classes next year.

After meeting with the committee, Grace met with Cornell's basketball team and with the dean of the college, Dennis Moore, Miller said both the team and Moore were impressed with Grace, so the committee offered him the job.

Grace, who graduated from Lincoln Southeast High School, served as a graduate assistant to Cornhusker coach Danny Nee for two years. Miller said that Nee highly recommended Grace for the Cornell job.

Before coming to Nebraska, Grace was the coach at Lexington St. Ann's High School. He led St. Ann's to a 34-8 record in two years.

Last season, Miller coached the Cornell basketball and football teams and also served as athletic director. Miller said because he had to devote his time to two sports, the performance of the basketball team suffered.

The first month we got off to a slow start because of the cross over and overlap between football and basketball season," he said. Cornell finished with a record of 7-15 overall last season and 4-9 in the Midwest Collegiate Athletic Conference. Miller said

Cornell's record was deceiving.
"We lost five games by a total of a nine points, which was probably the difference between a winning season and a losing one," he said. "It was just one of those years."

"They feel they're going to be a contender for the conference championship, which is a real positive thing," he said.

Because Cornell returns all their players this season, Miller said, Grace won't need to recruit more than a couple players this season. But Cornell has five seniors on its team, Miller said, which will mean that Grace will need to recruit heavily next year.
