

Boog's owner Gayle Hohl

Members of various bands are often found at Boog's

Hohl said she would never see her clothes after her musician friends borrowed them.

Although Hohl has never been in a band, many of her customers are musicians. Bands get a 10-percent discount, she said.

Besides musicians, her store caters to college students and teen-agers, she said.

Her customers certainly seem satisfied. One woman said every time she wears something from Boog's her friends keep asking her, "Where'd you get that, where'd you get that?"

Hohl still works another job, she said, as a backup.

"This might be a seasonal thing," she said. Hohl said the trendy thing right now in rock'n'roll rags is denim and leather.

"I'm selling spandex like crazy, even though it's 'out' on the coast," she said.

Boog's has many conveniences for a store its size. Its hours are from 2 to 8 p.m. Boog's has a dressing room and parking in the back.

Band members sometimes visit to talk to Hohl and check out her goods.

"I'm getting invaded by musicians," she said, as a group piled out of a van with Missouri license plates.

That group turned out to be Head East. "They were stars here," Hohl said. "They've rocked and rocked for ages."

"I want to know who's in here," she said. "I could have someone important in here and not know it."

Customers come and go. Hohl said they have been fairly constant all day as she pointed at her unfinished vacuuming.

"Everybody's smiling when they come in here," she said. And Boog smiles, too. "Isn't that great?"

ghost, yet a few keep the spirit alive. The world goes on, and the spirit wanders.

"So what happened to your old opinions?"

The thoughts that you held for so long?

That inspired a thousand rebellions Against what was and still is so wrong.

What happened to all your hopes and fears?

Ex-teenage rebel, same old story."
