

Permanent replacement for McFarland hasn't yet been found, Griesen says

cedures had to be implemented, he said.

McFarland's letter said: "Consequently, this situation has decreased the support base I need from my supervisors to get the job done and has taken its toll on me personally."

Griesen said McFarland's resignation did not surprise him, because the position is highly stressful.

"It would take an exceptional manager to feel comfortable with that kind of stress," Griesen said. "People burn out."

Griesen said the Office of Scholarships and Financial Aid has made significant progress in some areas, as a result of the work of "everyone in the office, including Bill (McFarland)."

"A lot of very positive contributions have been made by the staff down there and by outside staff," he said.

ware with the custom-made system, Griesen said.

These two problems prevented use of the FAM system and caused late mailings of financial award letters to students both years.

The award letters should have been mailed in April, but were not. All award letters for this year will be mailed "within days," Griesen said.

Griesen said the system will be worth the trouble it has caused when it is totally operational.

"It is a very sophisticated financial aid management system," he said. "Once it's up, it will be good and helpful."

Griesen said financial aid employees are seeing benefits in the system's use every day.

By next fall, Griesen said, the system will be used more and, by next spring, should be working well enough to have all financial award letters mailed on time.

Griesen has named John Beacon, director of admissions, as interim director of financial aid.

Griesen said Beacon's appointment reflects his wish to not further diminish staff resources in the financial aid office. By appointing Beacon, Griesen said, he hasn't taken any financial aid staff members away from their current duties.

"John will add manpower and is very experienced in handling computer-based student information systems," Griesen said.

Griesen said he hasn't considered a permanent replacement for McFarland, and that he won't rush into a search.

"The search process is too distracting and there are too many critical things going on right now," he said.

"I'm giving John a stab at it, then we'll talk about the future."

Beacon is a proven administrator who is well-suited in dealing with massive problems, Griesen said. He has 21 years of admissions experience, and has been director of admissions at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln since March 1987.

Clean Indoor Air Policy begins July 1

By Larry Peirce
Staff Reporter

The Nebraska Union's Clean Indoor Air Policy goes into effect July 1.

The specific provisions of the policy are:

1) No smoking in hallways, food preparation areas, elevators, emergency shelter areas, union-owned vehicles and restrooms.

2) Smoking is allowed in posted areas of dining areas.

3) No smoking in reception areas of office spaces. Office supervisors will determine whether smoking will be allowed in the rest of the office space.

4) Organizations reserving rooms for meetings must specify if the meeting will be smoking, non-smoking or both.

5) All public activities will be non-smoking.

6) Private meetings and banquets will have the option of smoking, non-smoking or both.

7) Nebraska Union — Smoking allowed only in posted areas: northwest corner of the main lounge, the south corridor of the second floor and the video game areas.

8) East Union — Smoking allowed in designated areas: east side of the third floor loft and the recreation room.

9) Commonplace — Smoking is allowed in the former kitchen on the first floor.

10) Smoking policies will be determined by businesses renting space.
