zeria, said he has had a 25 percent increase in his staff and is still hiring as a result of returning students.

Knudson said steady stream of customers come to his restaurant from the time it opens until it closes.

He expects business to level off and remain will double the following year and eventually grow to $20 million, gives the university more money to bargain with in federal matching-fund grants.

"The competition for awards has become extremely tough in Washington D.C.," he said. "The more money we can use for matching funds, the stronger our position will be."

The state research money sailed through the Legislature last year on the coattails of the faculty pay increase proposal. Yost said both the pay increase and research fund remain high on the university's priority list.

"Faculty salaries are still our No. 1 priority because it's a three-year plan," he said. "But right along with it we're including support for research."

Simerly said billions of dollars worth of external grants in the form of state, federal, private and corporate funding are available.

"I don't think redirecting our research is the answer," she said. "What we need to do, as an institution, is to be more assertive. The money is out there."

Simerly said the Office of Sponsored Programs has done all it can to get information to UNL faculty about available grants. Simerly said the office published a "Guide to Proposal Development and Sponsored Project Activity at UNL" that will be included in orientation packets for new faculty.

The office also developed a data base during the summer that helps the staff keep better track of grant proposals, monitor current funding opportunities and document faculty research interests.

Simerly said the office has made other improvements that allow the faculty to receive information faster. She said information about current funding sources arrives at UNL much faster than it has in the past through the Office of Federal Programs, an organization based in Washington D.C. She said the office also sends out a bimonthly newsletter giving research information to faculty.

"The faculty has to be more active in pursuing grants," she said.

Enthusiasm and hard work spell 'All-America' for two members of Nebraska's Yell Squad

By Ryan Steeves
Senior Reporter

Thanks to experience and a lot of practice, Brian Hilgenfeld and Keith Hippen achieved a first for University of Nebraska-Lincoln cheerleaders.

The two UNL seniors were selected for the National Cheerleaders Association All-America team. Hippen and Hilgenfeld are the first UNL cheerleaders to be selected for the team.

Staffers from the association selected the two because of their performance at a regional competition in Lincoln Aug. 8 through 11. The association chose 25 of the 3,000 cheerleaders that participated in competitions throughout the country.

Hilgenfeld, a three-year member of the Cornhusker Yell Squad, and Hippen, a four-year member, attributed their success to practice and experience. Hippen said he worked three hours a day lifting weights and practicing jumps to stay in shape.

Hippen, a pre-pharmacy major from Lewiston, said the success of a cheerleader is like the success of an athlete. The longer cheerleaders are on the team, he said, the better they become.

"It's more than just pompons and football," he said. "To us, it's a sport."

Hilgenfeld, a industrial engineering major from Humbolt, agreed.

"We call it a sport because we spend so much time at it," he said, "and because you couldn't do this without athletic ability."

Hippen said an enthusiastic attitude also helps a cheerleader succeed.

"I figure if I'm going to do something at school, I should do it to the best of my ability," Hippen said.

Hilgenfeld attributed his All-

America stature to long practices and the rigorous training the week before the competition.

"It's a real nice honor," he said. "It's nice to have something to pay off for all the work."

Although they weren't surprised by the selection, neither of them expected it. Hippen said he was concentrating on team stunts and efforts, not on individual goals.

"We weren't trying for the award," he said. "They just gave it to us."

Hippen and Hilgenfeld also credited the rest of the team for part of their success. The UNL Yell Squad won the varsity fight song competition and was the Award of Excellence champion. The junior varsity took second place in the same categories. The team will travel to Dallas, Texas, in January to compete in a national competition.
