they were done by internal people who were personally involved. This time we will bring in professionals from outside."

The review will address three main issues: what the role and mission of the center should be, what activities are important and appropriate to pursue within the constraints of the staff's limited resources and the most efficient way to administer the center and involve students in its governing body and operations.

The center should not be in any danger of being closed, Johnson said.

"There is a 52 to 53 percent population of females on campus," Johnson said. "They have lots of needs. The center also helps the men on campus understand the issues concerning women such as equal opportunity and affirmative action. I certainly don't want to close it."

'This time we'll bring in professionals from outside.'

Griesen said he has no intentions of closing the office, either.

A report will be written by the chairperson following the review, Griesen said. The report will include a consensus of the entire review team. Griesen was unsure when the report would be finished.

Three open forums will take place Monday in the Nebraska Union. A forum for faculty and staff will be from 2 p.m. to 3 p.m., followed by a forum for students from 3:15 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. and ending with a forum for alumni and community members at 5 p.m. to 6 p.m.

At the forums, people will be able to voice concerns and suggestions about the resource center.

The room number will be posted Monday in the Nebraska Union.

Katherine Araujo, the coordinator of the Women's Resource Center, was ill Thursday and was unavailable for comment.

Five UNL fraternities on probation

Abuse program given to house members.

Most fraternity presidents said they don't mind Anderson's policy. McDowell said he agreed with the policy and doesn't resent Anderson's visits.

"It needed to be done, not only with our house but across the campus," he said.

Bush said he also agreed with the policy.

"I'm glad we have a dry campus," Bush said. "Wet campuses have a lot more incidents. It takes its toll on buildings and everything."

Hoffman said he thought the punishments are fair and said he doesn't resent Anderson for initiating ing the punishment, either.

Ben Hall, public relations director for Kappa Sigma, said he agrees with Anderson in principal, but Anderson should enforce rules more consistently from year to year.

"Sometimes it is enforced and other times it isn't," he said.

Mark Minchow, president of Phi Kappa Psi, which is also on probation with a Student Health Alcohol Abuse program, agreed.

"I think she lets it slide sometimes and then she crashes down at other times," he said.

Minchow said UNL's drinking policy could force students to seek off-campus parties. Such parties are more dangerous, he said, because students usually have to drive.
