

Superman, Venus flytraps: only the shadows know

approach is the variety of meanings packed into each dance.

"Elva" could have been a comment about the effect of TV on our society, the fading of sexual roles, or even a new twist on the theme of "Elvis is God."

Or, it could be just a bunch of people having a good time with a TV and some spotlights.

In any case, Momix has something for everyone.

Besides the sheer inventiveness of performance, Momix has superb lighting, wonderful music and great props.

In "Momix," the prop is a huge, sleazy, white tropical leisure suit. Joseph Mills performs a sort of banana cabaret piece, looking a little bit like a small man trying to fill bigger shoes.

Mills creates illusion by holding poses for seemingly endless seconds. Supported by his cane, Mills leaps into the air for at least a full heartbeat.

He looks as though he is bounding in slow motion.

At first, "Brain Waves" looks like a high school physics experiment. A long sheet is rolled to the other side of stage, and someone flips the carpet from the left side.

The wave travels the length of the carpet and disappears stage right. This happens several times, until a wave comes from the left.

What results is a fight between the unseen people on the left and the right. The result is absolutely hysterical.

The final work, "E.C.," is a shadow show. An alien comes down to earth. A little boy falls to his mother's arms, but Mom turns into a Venus flytrap. Even Superman makes a guest appearance.

The main question is "How is it done?" Momix refused to divulge the secret, but suggested playing with two light sources and a sheet.

Humanity likes a mystery, and it was a very satisfied audience that left Kimball Recital Hall Tuesday night.
