

To be or not to be; roles won and lost

BALLET from Page 11

Off to the side, number 38, Tenae Graybosch, spins in place. She's pretty good, but she's also pretty little. Maybe next year.

The rest of the auditions go about the same, with older groups doing more intricate things. The skips across the stage turn to spins and leaps.

A group of older boys all stand together, way in the back of the hall, speaking only among themselves, as if they were self-supportive.

Finally, there's nothing to do but wait—wait for the lists.

THE LIST

The end of the day is a reward for some, nothing for others.

The judges don't mean to torture the dancers, but they also do not make snap decisions.

"This is the worst part," one mother said. "We're all typical stage moms, hoping our kids get in. I had some Pepto-Bismal before I came."

Eventually, the lists go up. The screams.

"I made it!"
"I didn't."

"I feel yucky, it's so embarrassing," Missy Jakoubek said. She didn't get cast for her second audition.

After double-checking the list, the happy and the dejected traveled out of the building, back to grim reality.

"Hey," a girl screamed to her friend. "What'd you get?"

Her friend looks up, with tears in her eyes.

"They towed my car," she said.
