Socialist Workers Party

andidate talks to UNL class

By Phil Richmond Staff Reporter

The working class must unite and establish a political base in order to avoid being exploited by the ruling class, said Kathleen Mickells, vice presidential candi-date for the Socialist Workers Party.

Speaking to a group of 100-level political science students at the University of Nebraska-Lin-coln Friday, Mickells said "the ruling class" of factory and mine owners and the government have resisted extending economic and political benefits to the working class throughout the world.

Organization is the only way to combat them, said Mickells, who was born in Omaha and is a former

UNL student. Mickells compared today's social and economic situation to that of the 1930s and said another working-class movement is needed. "The 1920s and '30s represented a working class movement trying to improve their lot in life,"

During that time, she said, un-ions were formed and labor forces united to exact fair treatment from employers. The eight-hour work day, unemployment insurance and workman's compensation are examples of the advances made during that time, she said.

"They (the ruling class) didn't just give them these things," she said. "Workers fought for them and some died.

But many benefits they gained have been lost in recent years as wages have fallen and labor unions have been on the wane, she said.

In 1981, management began weakening unions and forcing them to make concessions that have resulted in less pay, lower safety standards and faster produc-

"It's been a real push back on our standard of living," she said.

As a result of the squeeze on the working class, Mickells said, 1.5 million major industry jobs have been lost. Of the 16 million jobs created under the Reagan administration, 8 million of them pay less than $11,000 per year, she said.

As a result, the standard of living for most working people has dropped, Mickells said. This, combined with a depression that she said is eminent, will create a confrontation that will see "extra legal means and thug forces" used to subdue a working class movement.

"Either they rule," she said, "or workers and farmers unite to establish their own political base."

"My recollection was that ASUN (the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska) was going to work with us in suggesting students, and to be quite frank, that really didn't seem to come about," Baird said. "It certainly was the intention (to have more student participation.)"

Baird said a general liberal educa-tion gives students the abilities to adapt to a number of different vocations because they have developed the mental skills needed to make such

It would institute a "one stop center" to apply and acquire permits for locally sponsored sports events.

Anderson said.

"They're not only looking for the 'grand-daddy' events," she said, "but will help sponsor smaller groups as
