Dodgers' victory evens NL series

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rookie Tim Belcher allowed five hits in 8 1/3 innings and the Dodgers chased pitcher-reporter David Cone with five runs in the first two innings as Los Angeles beat the New York Mets 6-3 Wednesday night to even the National League playoffs at a game apiece.

In an article written for the New York Daily News, Cone said Los Angeles reliever Jay Howell looked "like a high school pitcher" in the ninth inning of Game 1, when the Mets scored three times for a 3-2 victory. Cone also said Dodgers starter Orel Hershiser was lucky to shut out the Mets for eight innings.

Lucky or not, Belcher beat Cone in Game 2.

Key to success at tennis invitational is 'mental concentration,' coach says

By Lori Griffin
 Staff Reporter

Concentration will be the key for the Nebraska women's tennis team when it stages the Husker Invitational

Friday and Saturday. Nebraska women's tennis coach Gregg Calvin said he is looking for a good mental effort from the Cornhuskers.

"Our concentration has improved at each practice and match," Calvin said. "But since no team scores will be kept, this will take a lot of the pressure off the athletes.

"We just need to play a match and put in our full effort. It is hard when the mental concentration goes."

The tournament includes Arkansas, Colorado, Iowa, Kansas State, Minnesota, Texas Tech and Wichita State.

Matches will be held at three sites beginning at 9 a.m. each day. Play will be continuous throughout the day.

The Friday matches will be held at Woods Park and East Campus courts. Saturday's matches will be held at the East Campus and Cather-Pound courts. All finals will be held at the East Campus courts, Calvin said.

Calvin said the Husker lineup will not change much from previous tournaments. Freshman Kathrin Edelkotter and sophomore Ildiko Guba will remain at the No. 1 and 2 singles spots, respectively. Sophomore Claudia Gandini will be added to the lineup at No. 7 singles.

Calvin said the No. 1 and 2 doubles teams will remain the same. Junior Doneta Holmen and sophomore Nancy Tyggum will remain at No. 1 while Edelkotter and Guba will participate in the No. 2 doubles competition.

The only change will come at the No. 3 doubles position, Calvin said, in which freshmen Leslie Sue Jones and Rachel Collins will team up for the first time this season.

Calvin said Texas Tech will be one of the best teams at the tournament. He said Iowa is also a good team and should provide a strong challenge, but added that up to five teams could provide challenges.

Winning at least one singles and doubles bracket will be the Huskers' goal this weekend, Calvin said. He said Nebraska needs to improve its attitude.

"This is a good team," Calvin said. "We just need to get to thinking that we are a good team. We need more positive thinking."

"Nebraska is ready for a good performance," he said.

ITCA meet draws NU

No Nebraska men's tennis player has ever managed to gain a berth in the National Indoor Tournament.

That could change Friday through Sunday when the Cornhuskers compete in the Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association tournament at Salina, Kan.

The tournament consists of the top 64 singles and top 32 doubles teams from Region 5, which consists mainly of Big Eight and Missouri Valley Conference schools.

McDermott said individuals that qualify for the finals of the singles competition will receive an all-expense paid trip to the National Indoor Tournament. Participants also must win the doubles competition to qualify for the tournament.

McDermott is using Nebraska's absence of qualifiers to inspire his players during this week's practices.

"We are anxious for (the meet)," he said, "and we have been throwing around the idea that since Nebraska has never had anyone qualify, we have asked 'Who will be the first Nebraska person to qualify (for the national tournament)?"

McDermott said this is Nebraska's biggest meet of the fall season and that he expects the Huskers to play well in the tournament.

Last year, Steven Jung, Nebraska's No. 1 singles player, lost in the semifinals. McDermott said he expects Jung to repeat or better that performance. Robert Sjöholm, the Huskers' No. 2 singles player, will also make a strong bid to be Nebraska's first qualifier, he said.

Ken Feuer, Nebraska's No. 3 singles player, also should be in the running, McDermott said.

"When Ken makes up his mind to, he does things good," McDermott said. "With Ken being a junior, he needs to look for leadership within himself and expect something out of himself."

"He needs to try and expect big wins."

In doubles competition, McDermott said, Nebraska's No. 1 doubles team of Steven and Stuart Jung should be considered among the favorites. The Jungs lost in the quarterfinals of last year's meet and are currently ranked 11th among the nation's collegiate doubles teams.

H.C. Taylor and Sjöholm, Nebraska's No. 2 doubles team, and the No. 3 tandem of Pat Carson and Feuer should also challenge for a national berth, McDermott said.

McDermott said the Huskers are capable of placing at least one singles player among the final 16 and at least one doubles team in the quarterfinals.

"If we can do this, then we have accomplished what we wanted to do," McDermott said. "We would like to get at least three past the quarterfinals, but that is a big goal."

McDermott said that in singles competition, the favorite is Hakan Svensson of Southwest Missouri State.
