

Free U offers bracelet weaving

By Tom Koenig
Staff Reporter

Underwater bracelet weaving and learning how to dance the ballroom blitz offer a break from a regular load of classes during the University Program Council's Free U.

Registration for Free U classes is from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. this week in the Nebraska Union lobby. The registration fee is waived for students and $2 for non-students. Classes usually meet once or twice during November.

Free U chairman Stephanie Herdahl said, "Free U is an opportunity for students to try different things that they wouldn't experience in other university classes."

"Classes can expand knowledge of students, educate them culturally and socially," Herdahl said.

Free U is a non-profit organization that offers mini-courses to students, faculty and the general public. Classes are taught by volunteers, some who are University of Nebraska-Lincoln professors, Herdahl said.

Courses include Ballroom Blitz, Parliamentary Procedure, Miracle Massage, Krishnamurti: The Transformation of Man, Scarf and Bow Tying, Lotus 1-2-3, Microsoft Word on Macintosh, Funtastic Drinks, Yoga, Underwater Bracelet Weaving, Self Defense, Post-Election Discussion, Band-Aids for Bikes, Do or Dye and Silent Words.

With these courses students can learn to dance, fix a bicycle, computer basics, organize a meeting, dye clothing, sign language, make non-alcoholic drinks, transform consciousness, choose a scarf, discuss the elections or make friendship bracelets, Herdahl said.

Herdahl said computer classes fill quickly, so students should sign up as soon as possible if they're interested.

Herdahl said the post-election session will discuss the outcome of the 1988 presidential election and will include panelists Tom Monahan, Nebraska state democratic chairman; Bob Sittig, UNL political science professor; Dick Shugrue, Creighton University Law professor and Norm Riffel, Nebraska state republican chairman.

Forensics team places second in tournament

By Eve Nations
Staff Reporter

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln Speech team finished 2nd-place Saturday at a tournament at Creighton University.

Ann Pettus, director of forensics, said she was pleased with the performance of the team this year.

The speech team competes in two different kinds of events, Pettus said. Those include individual speaking and debating in teams.

The UNL team, comprised of 15 debate teams and 50 individual speakers, placed high at the Creighton tournament.

Among the individual competitors, Brent Nichols placed 2nd in communication analysis and 4th in extemporaneous speaking; Jim Kimble placed 1st in persuasion. Melanie Mason finished 1st in program on a theme and Susan Williams and Susie Loftus finished 2nd and 3rd. Williams and Loftus also finished 1st in duo. Nancy Centilevis finished 5th in a program on a theme.

The speech team also finished 28th in the 30th tournament at Colorado College.

Those who won honors were Tim Borchers, who placed 3rd in communication analysis and Amy Frame, who placed 3rd in a Lincoln/Douglas debate. The team of Frame and Jason Downs made it to the quarter-finals and the debate team of Kristen Svoboda and Tom Friedrich went to the semi-finals.

Pettus said the team is getting ready for upcoming tournaments at Wichita State, Bradley University in Peoria, Ill., and Butler University in Indianapolis.

Another O.K. weekend is over.

4	Five more days until the next one. Sometimes hardly an hour goes by that the heart doesn't long for something with real meaning. Real meaning comes from learning about God in a meaningful way. The Christian Science Reading Room is a place to do that. Bring this ad (or mail it) to the Reading Room for a free copy of the Christian Science Sentinel. The Sentinel is a weekly magazine written by people who are finding that there's more to live for than just another weekend. They share what they've learned about God in practical terms - based on the teachings of Christian Science. It's a meaningful way to put an end to the meaningless.
