Bereuter banner gets complaints, but is permitted

By Jerry Guenther

A blue banner that reads "Doug Bereuter Congress" hanging in the marquee north of the Nebraska Union had some people seeing red Monday.

Daryl Swanson, director of the Nebraska Unions, said he received three phone calls Monday complaining about the banner.

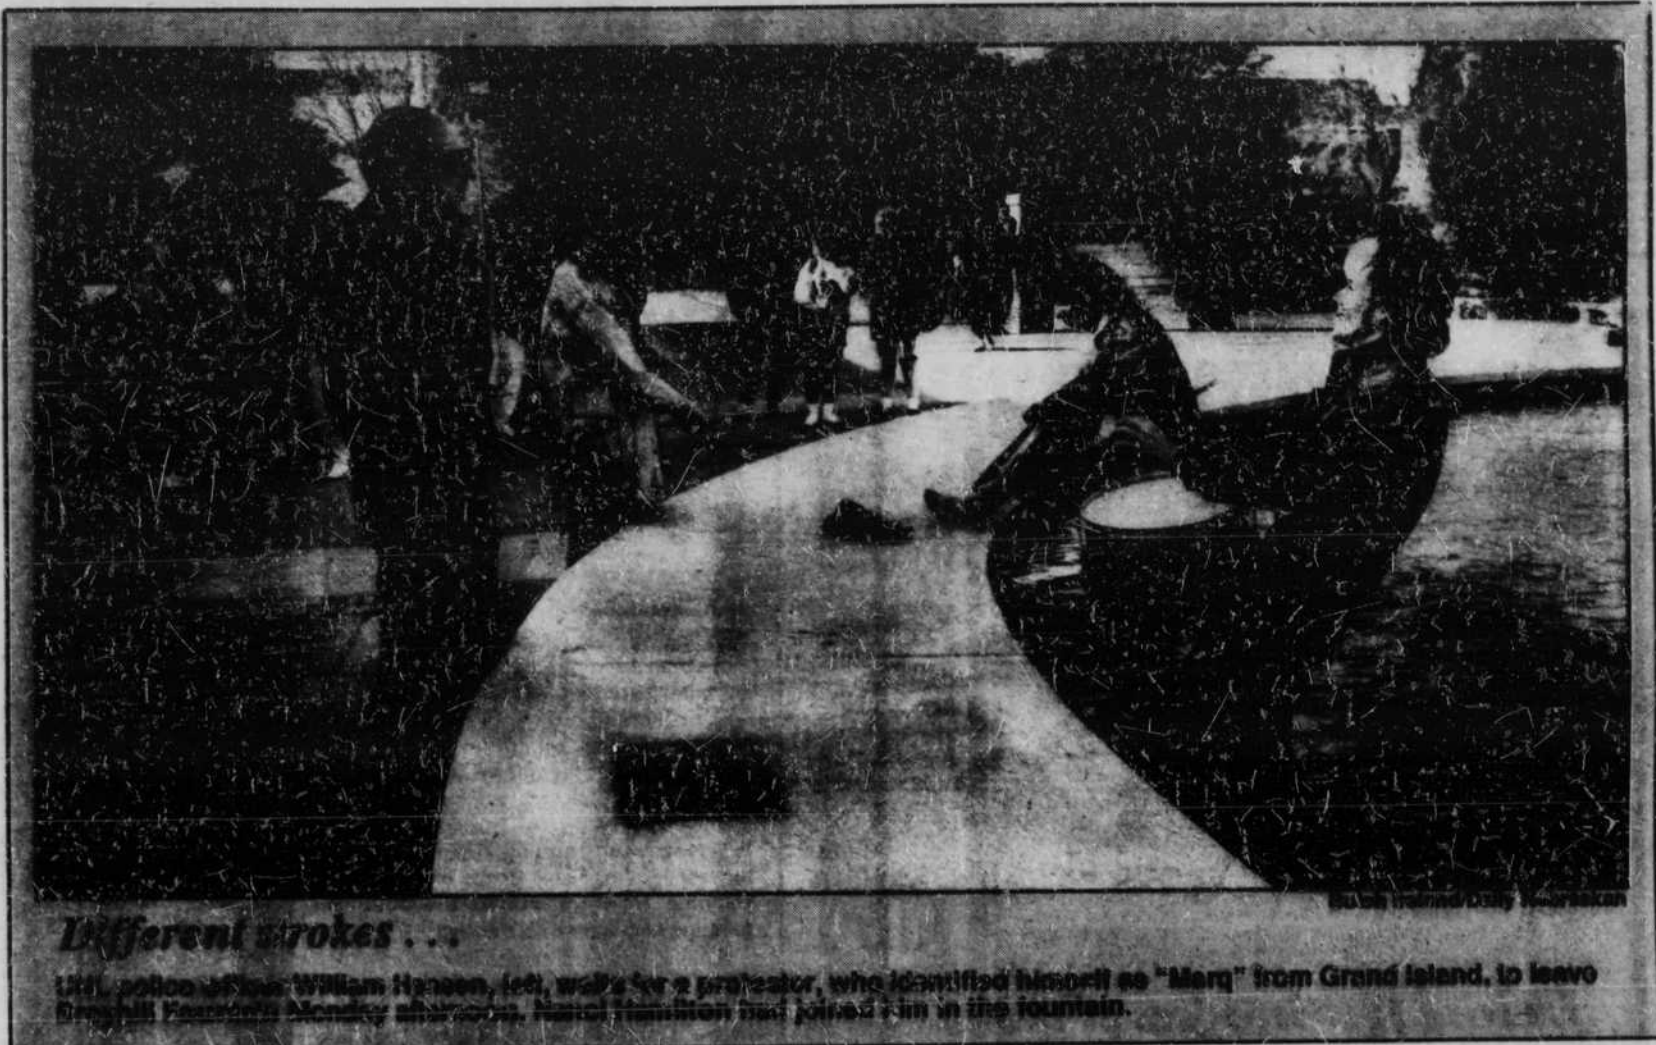

'But as long as it is a recognized student organization we don't have any problems with it.'

— Swanson

"This isn't a totally unusual situation," Swanson said.

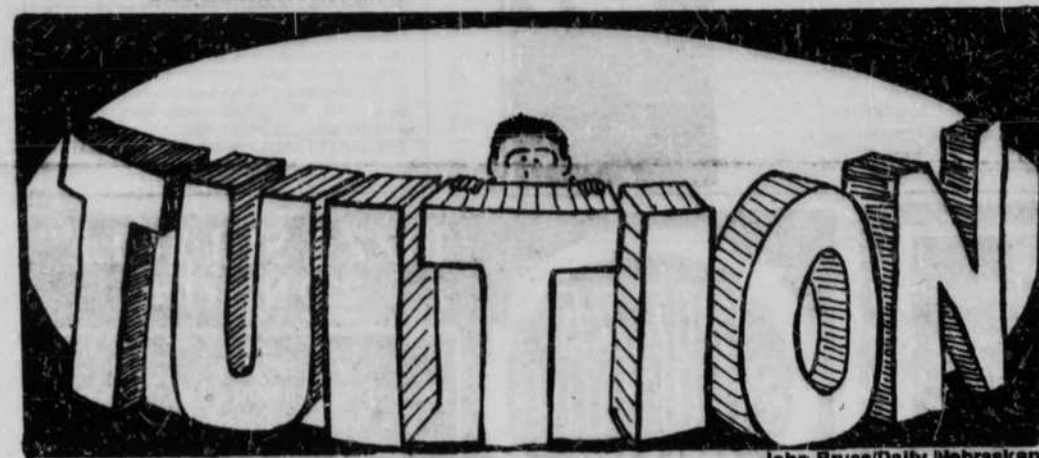

Swanson said people usually assume it is not possible for a political banner to be hung in a public display.

Penalties exist for late payment

By Tom Koenig
Staff Reporter

Students who don't pay their tuition bills are subject to fines or the hounding of collection agencies, according to Robert Clark, director of Student Accounts at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Clark said many things can happen to students who have failed to pay their tuition.

A block, or hold as it used to be called, is placed on students that haven't paid their university-related bills. When this happens, students' transcripts will not be released, graduating students will not receive their diplomas and future enrollment will be denied.

Clark said he encourages students to be prompt with their payments.

Tuition and fees can be paid beginning the first day of the semester. Students who have missed pre-registration and are registering Jan. 12 and 13 may defer their payments until Feb. 15, 1989.

On approximately Feb. 3, 1989, a statement of fees and tuition payments will be mailed to the local address shown on the students' academic record.

If students have not received their statement by Feb. 8, 1989, they should contact the Office of Student Accounts.

Payments must be received in the Bursar's Office before 4 p.m. Feb. 15, 1989. If no payment has been made at that time, the student will be charged a late fee of $20.

If no payment of all tuition and fees and service charges has been received by the Office of Student Accounts, the student's registration will be turned over to a collection agency.

Clark said that when follow-up letters have been sent to students and no attempt has been made by the student to pay the outstanding bills, the Student Accounts Office will give collection agencies the authorization to sue the student.

Tuition and fees for the 1988-89 school year are $48.50 per credit hour for undergraduates, $131.75 per credit hour for non-residents. Graduate students pay $64.50 per credit hour for residents and $156.75 for nonresidents.

Students who have a guardian in charge of their finances should inform them of the due dates. Payment should include the students' name and Social Security number. Clark said it is important for students to know that in the event of a missing or delinquent payment, he or she is still responsible for meeting the deadline.

Masters Week presents alumni

By William Lauer

Five distinguished alumni of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln will talk with students and faculty about their career and education experiences in conjunction with the Masters Week program Wednesday through Saturday.

John Cooper, Donald Plucknett, Susanne Schafer, Ray Shepard and David Young will speak in classrooms on the UNL campus.

They will discuss "how school helped them and what classes they would have taken to help prepare for the real world," said Barb Newcomer, information representative for the University Information Department and coordinator of Masters Week.

Since 1963, inviting outstanding alumni to speak with students and faculty in classrooms has remained the format for Masters Week, Newcomer said.

UNL deans are asked to submit nominations of eminent alumni to participate in the program, she said. The list is approved by the Innocents Society and the Mortar Board, sponsors of the program, and the final selection is made by the chancellor, she said.

Cooper, a Scottsbluff native, is head of the solution chemistry section of the Naval Research Laboratory in Washington, D.C. He earned a bachelor of science degree in chemistry and mathematics from UNL in 1967, a master of science degree and a doctorate in chemistry in 1968 and 1971.

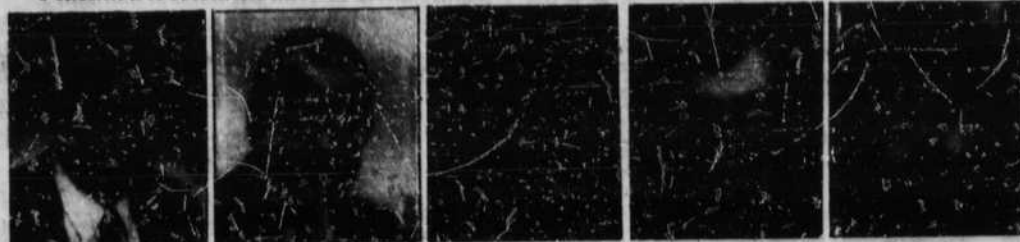

Plucknett is scientific adviser to the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research for the World Bank in Washington, D.C. A native of DeWitt, Plucknett received a bachelor of arts degree in agriculture from NU in 1953, a master of science degree in agronomy in 1957 and a doctorate from the University of Hawaii in tropical soil science in 1961.

Schafer, from Omaha, received a bachelor of journalism degree from UNL in 1974 and a master of arts degree in international affairs from Tufts University in Medford, Mass. She is a White House correspondent for The Associated Press and has worked as a journalist in Iowa, New York and The Netherlands.

Shepard, a native of Lincoln, is president of the consulting firm Shepard Associates and an educational publisher. Shepard is a past president of Scribner Laidlaw, a division of Macmillan Inc., and has held management positions with Houghton Mifflin Co. and Globe Book Co. He received a bachelor of science in education from UNL in 1967 and an M.A.T. from the Harvard Graduate School of Education in 1971.

Young is a professor of classics at the University of California Santa Barbara and an internationally respected scholar of the Greek poet Pindar. An expert on Olympics and ancient Greek athletics, Young has served on the U.S. Olympic Committee and has been a delegate to the International Olympic Academy. A native of Lincoln, Young received a bachelor of arts from NU in 1959, a master of arts degree in 1960 and a doctorate in classics from the University of Iowa in 1963.

Survey: Parents worry about academic help

By Eve Nations
Staff Reporter

Parents of University of Nebraska-Lincoln freshmen were able to voice concerns during a recent phone survey conducted by the UNL Parents Association, according to Peg Johnson, director of special projects for the office of the vice chancellor for student affairs.

The survey, which was conducted Oct. 18, revealed parents were interested mainly in UNL's academic support programs.

"The parents were concerned with advising, tutoring and how their child could get help," Johnson said.

The parents association attempted to call 533 parents; 358 were reached. "A form was filled out as the parents were called," Johnson said. "If there was a problem or question that the parent wanted followed up on, the form was sent to the appropriate place."

For instance, she said, if a parent had a child in a math class and the parent thought the student needed a tutor, then the form was sent to the math department.

After the follow-up request was sent out, the report was to be returned to the association. Letters will be sent out to thank the parents for their participation, Johnson said.

Of the parents surveyed, 59 calls required follow-up inquiries, she said.

The survey, according to Johnson, was mainly a public relations effort.

"It was done to determine if there were services that needed to be offered or problem areas that UNL needed to be aware of," she said.

The parents who were called were randomly selected by a computer, Johnson said.

"Part of the result was that, overwhelmingly, the parents were terribly impressed that the university took the time to call," Johnson said. "It helped show that the university cares about their children."
