Coaches' battle has reached an all-time high

ences, all the while wondering why coaches in the Big Eight Conference don't get along like coaches in the Mid-American Conference.

The battle was intensified when Nee made his first trip to Columbia, Mo., and subsequently had his first encounter with the Antlers. The Antlers, a group of obnoxious, unruly students known for their profanity more than for their sportsmanship, targeted their gestures toward Nee and former Nebraska guard Brian Carr. This action angered Nee, who vowed he would take steps toward protecting himself and his players if Nebraska ever traveled to Columbia as a team contending for the Big Eight title.

ish battle after that forgetful season, it continued. This time, Nee got sweet revenge when Nebraska defeated Missouri 70-68 last season in Lincoln. He also publicly ridiculed Stewart for the actions of the Antlers, saying that the Missouri coach and other university officials should have better control of the crowd.

The battle between the two coaches reached an all-time high Saturday when Stewart allegedly confronted Nee prior to the start of the Nebraska-Missouri game. According to a source within the Nebraska athletic department, Stewart allegedly grabbed Nee by the arm, a gesture which Nee which took offense to.

Then, midway through the first While it would have been easy for half, the Nebraska bench nearly Bob Devaney Sports Center crowd of Nee and Stewart to forget their child- erupted when Missouri center Gary Leonard literally ran over Cornhusker forward Beau Reid. This action sent the Nebraska coaching staff particularly assistant coach Gary Bargen -- into a near frenzy, as both teams were required to return to their respective benches. This action brought a chorus of boos from the 13,066, and a lot of screaming and lems of Nebraska centers Rich King and Richard van Poelgeest to pull

But with 23 seconds remaining and Missouri clinging to a 17-point lead, Stewart infuriated the crowd by calling a timeout. The fans behind the Missouri bench reacted by criticizing the veteran coach, a gesture which wasn't taken lightly.

"When your bush-league coach gets his (deletive) act together, then we'll stop pounding on you," Stewart said.

Following the game, after the two coaches exchanged a handshake that was anything but friendly, a Nebraska fan called Stewart "class-less." Stewart also took offense to finger pointing by Bargen.

Amazingly, the game remained this statement, as he retaliated by relatively uneventful for the 37 minutes, as Missouri used the foul prob (deletive) sucker." Again, the worst calling Nee a "(deletive) bush league (deletive) sucker." Again, the worst part of the profanity has been deleted.

The bottom line to all of this bickering and name calling is this: If that's what it takes to have a top-10 basketball team -- a goal which Nee is slowly striving for -- it's not worth it. If a win-at-all-cost attitude has to be employed along with an "opponent-is-always-your-encmy" attitude, forget it.

Nebraska fans would rather have their mediocre basketball team without any tradition than subject themselves so low.
