

Plan's goal to keep minority grad students

the number of fellowships for minority students.

The plan will go into effect immediately, Yost said. The Feb. 15 application deadline for graduate programs will not apply to the minority graduate recruitment plan, he said.

"I want to give academic departments as long as they need to attract minority students," Yost said.

Yost began work on the plan last August after being concerned about the low number of minority graduate students at UNL for several years, he said. The plan probably will show a greater change in recruitment once it is more widely publicized next fall, he said.

"This goes beyond expression of general concern. It is a specific plan that will hopefully bring us a more culturally diverse student body at the graduate level."

Bills stop minors' buying

State Sen. Carol McBride Pirsch of Omaha opened a can of Kingsbury, a near beer, and passed it around the committee table during testimony in favor of the bill. Pirsch said she wanted to show senators that near beer "looks, smells and tastes like real beer."

LB441 is actually a reinstatement of an old law. Last spring, the Legislature changed several sections of the Nebraska Liquor Control Act. One change included removing from its regulation any beverages which contained less than one-half of one percent alcohol. In doing so, the Legislature inadvertently created a situation in which minors could purchase near beer, Hannibal said.

J. Michael Hughes, a representative for Lincoln Package Beverage Association, said that before near beer was deregulated it was a "very small seller." He said he has heard of stores where sales have quadrupled since it was deregulated.

"We didn't anticipate the problem that would crop up," he said, referring to the numbers of minors buying near beer.

No one testified against LB441 and one person testified against LB440, saying the bill's penalties were not strong enough.
