Quality is still the same, Weber says

David Frana/ Daily Nebraskan
Ted and Wally's

said he and Wally had to remodel.

"We did the ceiling ourselves," Weber said pointing to the wooden lattice work on the high ceiling.

The two owners hung up the 1915 G.E. Halophane lamps which hang from the ceiling.

"We found them in 40 different antique stores from here to the East Coast," Weber said.

Weber said he and his partner are used to the new place and, with the exception of the loosed-brick floor, tried to rebuild the same atmosphere as the old place. The new building has a wooden floor.

"We've tried to keep it basically the same -- we didn't want it to be plastic."

But Weber laments a little over the relocation.

"There's a real sense of loss even today -- people comment they liked the old place better," he said.

Weber adds that he's used to the new place and he likes it.

"We have more space," Weber said. "We had a tiny kitchen."

Ted and Wally's is anything but tiny. The five year old business has expanded in many ways. Not only have they expanded their menu, they also opened a business in Omaha's Old Market area.

One thing, Weber said, hasn't changed and that's their commitments to quality.

They still make ice-cream with rock salt and ice.

"It's premium ice cream -- it's as rich as we can make it," Weber said. "We turn it as slow as we can so it won't have any air in it."

"We have a good reputation, the atmosphere stands out and people remember," Weber said.
