Division to implement new device

The computer will automatically verify registration of vehicles, matching up students' names with their addresses, Chamberlain said. Technicians then will enter the name of a student wanting to pay a fine and all the outstanding tickets will be listed, she said.

However, Chamberlain said, getting the system operational will take some time. All information on registered vehicles and all outstanding tickets must be entered manually into the system. Presently there are about 50,000 outstanding tickets at UNL.

During spring break, the office technicians who process tickets and collect student fines at the UNL Police Department will learn how to operate the eight terminals and accompanying software, Chamberlain said.

Chamberlain said that although Auto Cite won't be used to verify tags until all data entry is completed, it will be used to issue tickets once the parking controllers are trained and the main computer is operating.

She also said new computerized cash registers have been installed that will accept the new photo identification cards. The cash registers will read the magnetic bands, and then will give a student's name and identification number.

The total cost of implementation will be from $50,000 to $70,000, Chamberlain said. The computer system will be purchased with funds from the Parking Enforcement Division, she said.

The division last year generated $985,000 in revenue from permits, meters, fines and lot rentals. The division receives no money from the university, she said.

Car hits fountain; driver leaves scene

From Staff Reports

The driver of a vehicle that struck Broyhill Fountain at about 3:15 a.m. Saturday reportedly ran from the vehicle after the accident, according to University of Nebraska-Lincoln Police Department records.

The individual was seen stumbling at 14th and R streets by an officer, was picked up and admitted to hitting the fountain, said UNL Police Cpl. Linda McEntarffer. The individual was charged with driving while intoxicated and leaving the scene of an accident, McEntarffer said.

The fountain received an estimated $4,000 in damages, while $3,000 in damages was reported to the vehicle, she said.
