Measles list provokes reactions among UNL students

By Larry Peirce
 Senior Reporter

Lists of University of Nebraska-Lincoln students who are not known to be adequately immunized for rubella measles were posted around campus Monday, as health officials continue a disease control program to prevent a major outbreak of the highly contagious disease.

The lists contained the names of 13,282 students "not known to be adequately immunized," said Dr. Gerald Fleischli, medical director of the University Health Center.

As of Monday at 8 p.m., no students with measles symptoms had come to the health center and no new cases of measles had been diagnosed there, Fleischli said.

The list is a result of a computer search of health center and university records to find people who may need to come to mass immunizations on Wednesday and Thursday at UNL.

Health officials are trying to prevent a major outbreak of measles after one student was diagnosed as having rubella measles last Thursday, Fleischli said. Others are expected to show symptoms this week,

Fleischli says measles insert to save time

An insert in the Daily Nebraskan today and Wednesday should help University of Nebraska-Lincoln students save time in the measles-immunization process, according to Gerald Fleischli, University Health Center medical director.

Fleischli said the insert will contain information about rubella measles, mumps and rubella measles -- the three diseases the vaccination protects against. Also, he said, it will list the side effects of vaccination, people who shouldn't be immunized, and the kind of reaction to the vaccination people can expect.

The insert includes an immunization request form that students are instructed to read and complete before vaccination, he said.

By filling out the form beforehand, he said, students will shorten the amount of time it takes to be immunized.

"If people don't know what's happening ahead of time, lines back up," Fleischli said.

UNL students who are under 19-years-old and live in Lincoln with their parents will need their parents' signature on the form.

High school students attending UNL classes also will need their parents' permission, he said.

UNL students under 19 who don't live in Lincoln will not need parental consent, Fleischli said.

"College students should be able to read and understand this type of document," he said. "But people who live in Lincoln should take advantage and discuss the form with their parents."

Immunization request forms also will be available at the immunization sites in Cook Pavilion and the Nebraska Union Wednesday and Thursday 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

lives in Abel Hall, the biggest dorm on campus."

After checking for their own names some students searched for their friends' names.

Troy Bredenkamp, a sophomore biological sciences major, said he was relieved that he wasn't on the list.

"I don't like shots," he said. "But I had to laugh when I saw how many of my friends were on the list."

Runge said she was concerned that faculty also would be at risk of catching the contagious disease.

"They're making such a big deal of it for the students, but there's the faculty too," Runge said.

But health officials said last weekend that persons born before 1957 are considered immune to the measles because epidemics were more common before that year.

Kori Lewis, a sophomore psychology major, wasn't on the list and was waiting for her doctor to verify her immunity.

"Everybody is just freaking out about it," Lewis said.

Lewis said her doctor in Lincoln has received many phone calls from students who wanted to know if they were immune.

he said.

Lists are posted in the Nebraska unions, Love Library, the health center, the Reunion and in residence hall cafeterias.

UNL students had a variety of reactions Monday to seeing, or not seeing, their names on the measles list on the wall of the main lounge of Nebraska Union.

Lisa Weathermon, a junior sociology major, said she "panicked" when she saw her name on the list.

Weathermon said she might be on the list because she didn't turn her immunity information to the health center when she came to UNL in 1986.

Kathy Runge, a junior elementary education major, said she was surprised her name wasn't on the list. Even her mother told her she would probably need to be immunized, she said, because she was born in 1967. She thought that because she was born before 1969 she would need the shot.

Runge said the health center's reaction to the measles outbreak was appropriate.

"We live in a house with other students, someone is bound to have it," she said. "And the guy that has it

Legislative bill to grant more discretion to police

Granting law enforcement officials more discretion in domestic violence cases, the Nebraska Legislature gave second-round approval Monday to LB330 after amending it five times.

LB330, which was introduced by Sen. Carol Pirsch of Omaha, advanced 29-0 after more than two hours of debate.

Under LB330, a law enforcement officer without a warrant may arrest a person if the officer has reasonable cause to believe the person has committed a felony or misdemeanor, or has reason to believe such a person will not be apprehended unless immediately arrested.

The bill also states an officer without a warrant may arrest an individual if the officer believes that person may cause injury or damage, may destroy or conceal evidence, or has committed a misdemeanor in the presence of the officer.

LB330 was amended 26-15 to include another bill, LB218, which gives officers the authority to perform warrantless arrests if they believe an individual is "threatening another in a menacing manner."

Sen. David Bernard-Stevens of North Platte said the amendment is necessary to

Hungary to become multiparty democracy, speaker says

By David G. Young
 Staff Reporter

In less than one year, Hungary will become the first communist state in Europe to change to a system of multiparty democracy, said Peter Rajcsanyi, adviser to the general secretary of the Hungarian Communist Party.

Rajcsanyi spoke to a small group of University of Nebraska-Lincoln faculty and students Monday afternoon. He is visiting the United States to study its political organization.

The Hungarian government will institute a new constitution in December, which will lead to multiparty elections in May 1990, he said. These elections will be the first of their kind in Eastern Europe since the Soviets imposed communist rule after World War II.

"Hungary is the only country in the whole Eastern European region which is moving toward a multiparty constitutional democracy," he said. "The system adopted and applied after the second World War has been outdated -- outdated by the mid 1970s at the latest."

Rajcsanyi said several changes in the European political sphere made Hungarian reform measures possible. These changes include the relaxation of Soviet political control in Eastern Europe as well as the planned development of the European Economic Community free-trade zone by 1992.

Under the current economic system in communist Hungary, the national currency is "soft," and thus not convertible to U.S. money or other Western "hard" currencies. Future reforms in Hungary could change this condition, making it possible for the country to join the EEC. If everything goes right, Hungary might become a part of the Common Market in 10 or 15 years, Rajcsanyi said.

Involvement with the European Economic Community, as well as other ties to Western economies, is essential if Hungary is to pull itself out of the crisis created by past economic policies, he said. Hungary now has the highest per capita debt in all of Europe, Rajcsanyi said.

One of the largest political problems facing Eastern Europe is conflict among individual communist countries, he said. The most serious problem involves Hungary's neighbor, Romania, whose continued Stalinist policies have created external and internal problems, he said.

"Large quantities of refugees are coming over from Romania to Hungary," Rajcsanyi said. "Every month, we have 12,000 people come over from Romania. This is the biggest potential crisis in the next two or three years in the whole of Eastern Europe."
