

Number of injuries is high this spring, Osborne says

By Steve Sipple
Staff Reporter

Nebraska football coach Tom Osborne said the number of injuries this spring "is on the high side," and the most telling blow could be to a fourth-string defensive left tackle. Osborne said redshirt freshman Dave Jensen, an Omaha Creighton

Prep product, will undergo arthroscopic surgery on his knee today and might not be available in the fall. Of all the injured Cornhuskers, Osborne said, Jensen may be the only one to miss the fall season. Jensen suffered a knee injury during last Wednesday's scrimmage. "They'll scope Jensen," Osborne said after Monday's practice at Memorial Stadium. "If anything's torn, they'll do reconstructive surgery." Osborne said he's concerned that Jensen may have suffered a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his knee. "We're hoping -- knocking on wood -- that he doesn't have anything," Osborne said after running his team through a full-pad workout in Monday's 90-degree temperatures.

The team was particularly thin Monday at the wingback position and on the offensive line. Wingbacks Richard Bell (thigh injury) and Nate Turner (ankle), listed at the top of last week's depth chart, were both in street clothes at the workout. Turner is done for the spring, Osborne said. Split end Chip Bahe practiced, but was limping on a sore ankle.

Among the missing on the offensive line were tackles Tom Punt (foot) and Terry Eymann (knee strain). Guard Bill Bobbora is out for the rest of the spring with a knee injury. With Saturday's Red-White game on the horizon, Nebraska still has some questions to be answered, Osborne said. "We're not where we need to be," he said. "We got some holes to fill."

Sanders: Weekend losses to Cowboys 'discouraging'

By Jerry Guenther
Staff Reporter

A weekend sweep by Oklahoma State did not sit well with Nebraska baseball coach John Sanders. The Cornhuskers dropped all four games in the series at Stillwater, Okla., as the nationally-rated Cowboys took over sole possession of first place in the Big Eight. "It was discouraging," Sanders said. "We played well during the first game, then didn't close it out. After that, the wheels fell off." In the opener Friday, Oklahoma State rallied for three runs in the bottom of the eighth inning to post an 11-

9 win. Saturday, the Cowboys swept a doubleheader from Nebraska 13-6 and 15-8 before concluding the series Sunday with a 14-3 victory. The losses left Nebraska with a 20-21 record, which marks the first time that a Husker team coached by Sanders has had a losing record this late in the season. "We competed hard, gave a good effort and played well in spots," Sanders said, "but it didn't add up to a sound performance." "Against a quality opponent, those things happen." Though Sanders said the Huskers' pride was hurt, he is confident they will bounce back. 'We competed hard, gave a good effort and played well in spots, but it didn't add up to a sound performance.' --Sanders Sanders said one consolation for

Nebraska is that it has already faced Oklahoma and Oklahoma State, the top two teams in the Big Eight. The Huskers, who are 4-8 in the conference, can still earn a conference tournament berth by finishing in the top four of the standings. They are now sixth. Sanders said a tournament berth is possible considering the Huskers were 5-7 last year against the same three conference opponents they have already played this year -- yet they still managed to qualify for the tournament. Another beneficial factor, Sanders said, is that the Huskers will be at home for eight of the twelve remaining conference games. They host Missouri in a four-game series this weekend and Iowa State in another four-game series on May 13 and 14. "I think the standings are going to be jumping around a bit in the next few weeks," Sanders said. Considering all the adversity Nebraska has experienced this season, Sanders said it would be "ironic" if Nebraska would qualify for the tournament and play well during it. "Our main concern is just to play as well as we can, and the final standings will appear based on that effort."
