Artisans Fair, street dance are planned for summer

By Cristine Romano

This summer's special events in the Haymarket promise to be worth the hike through some torn up streets in the area.

Mary Keef, Haymarket promotion coordinator, says she expects an enthusiastic turn out again this summer for the Artisans Fair, the Haymarket Street Dance and the Farmers' Market.

The Artisans Fair will be making its fourth appearance this year along Haymarket streets on Sunday, May 21. Fair goers can meander up and down Haymarket sidewalks and view the work of over 50 Nebraska artists. Plenty of food will be available, too, Keef said.

This year the Schultz Strolling Band will provide "real upbeat" music for the fair, Keef said. Because of road construction and lack of sidewalk space, part of the fair may move to the safety of the Haymarket courtyard, between 8th and 9th on P St., Keef said.

In conjunction with the Artisan Fair, the Corvette Association will present the All-American Auto Show in the parking lot at 9th and Q streets. Over 100 classic and collectible cars will be on display.

On June 16, the Haymarket will be invaded by the boys from Austin, Texas, The LeRoi Brothers. They'll provide blues for the 2nd Annual Haymarket Street Dance. Last summer, over 10,000 people attended the dance, Keef said, and this year's show promises to be good. The dance, part of the annual Flatwater Festival, begins at sundown on O Street between 7th and 8th streets.

Lincolnites can take a step back in time every Saturday morning this summer at the outdoor Farmers' Market. This modern use of the market isn't far removed from the original purpose of the Haymarket. Today's Haymarket was once "Market Square" during the first 10 years of Lincoln's existence. Market Square was a place where early Lincolnites could buy and sell produce and livestock, or just hang out.

Today's Farmers' Market isn't much different. Corn, melons, eggs and ethnic foods are for sale, as well as fresh fish and other meat. Entertainment is provided in the form of bluegrass musicians, mimes and jugglers.

The Farmers' Market begins June 10 and continues every Saturday until Oct. 28.
