revision each semester, so that an instructor on the Omaha campus can teach classes on the Lincoln and West Nebraska campuses as well. This system means that students can take their required courses on any campus.

Students enter the College of Nursing as sophomores. They gain practical experience by working in various hospitals and nursing homes in Lincoln.

Costanzo said that the college has trouble with decreasing enrollment and has filled its enrollment capacity for the fall.

She said that there is no problem with the stability of the nursing program in Lincoln, despite proposals made in the 1980s to abolish the college.

"The program is there to stay," he said.

Business Administration

The College of Business Administration at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln offers excellent instruction as well as trips to the Far East and England.

Besides having a strong research orientation and 65 nationally renowned faculty members, CBA offers its students the chance to study abroad for a semester, said Phil Hall, assistant dean for undergraduate studies.

The college has a fall semester exchange with Shenshu University in Japan. Students spend the fall semester studying in Japan and receive credit.

CBA has just started a summer program where students spend the second five weeks taking a course at Oxford University in England, Hall said.

"We're hoping for further expansion of international programs," he said.

The large number of students enrolled in CBA has led to overcrowding in some classes, Hall said.

Officials at CBA are increasing the size of classes and office space next year, more than 4,000 students take classes offered by CBA, but only about 3,000 undergraduates have declared majors in business.

CBA is fully accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business, a top national accrediting agency, Hall said. The School of Accountancy is separately accredited, he said.

CBA has five departments: accounting, economics, finance, management and marketing.

Hall said CBA classes and requirements are comparable to other business colleges in the nation.

CBA officials require students to maintain a 2.5 grade point average to take classes in the college. Some students have a hard time meeting that requirement, he said.

To assist learning, a COE computer center is set up in the CBA building with IBM and Apple Macintosh computers.

All university students are free to use the computers during open lab times, Hall said.

Hall said most graduates find jobs in large businesses, accounting firms, banking, insurance and public utilities.

Teachers College

The Teachers College at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln offers 42 majors, most of which are teaching majors, said Margaret Sievers, academic advisor for the Teachers College Student Services Center.

Students in the Teachers College can register for non-teaching majors such as athletic training and community health.

Sievers said the Teachers College is nationally recognized as the number one student teaching program. Because of the good reputation the college has, Sievers said, there is a large number of students at the college. There are no limits on enrollment to the Teachers College and the admissions office listed 2,134 students for the 1989 spring semester.

Four years ago, a minimum grade point average of 2.5 was established for anyone enrolled in the Teachers College.

Students interested in a teaching major should be very sure that teaching is their desired career, Sievers said.

"There are many hurdles to cross for teaching majors because state certification is required," Sievers said.

Faculty and administrators urge students to meet with their adviser regularly, she said. The College has made many changes in the program that advisers can explain to students.

The Teachers College also offers a graduate program and several masters degrees.

Arts & Sciences

The grandfather of all the colleges at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln is the College of Arts and Sciences.

Arts and Sciences is the oldest college with the largest number of students and faculty, said Kim Hachiya, publications coordinator for the college. She said the college has more than 4,100 students, with

"21 different departments students can major in."

"Graduates can go into anything they want because it's such a broad background," Hachiya said.

Some graduates become artists, chemists and bankers, while others become economists, musicians, dancers or go into sales, Hachiya said.

"A lot go on to law, dental or nursing school," she said.

Hachiya said every student at the university takes at least one class through the college.

She said engineering majors take math classes and agriculture majors take science classes, all offered by the College of Arts and Science.

"It's the heart or core of the university," she said.

Faculty members do all types of research.

"You name it, they do it," she said.

One member is researching the cold fusion techniques, another is working on ethanol production, she said.

"The English department has the world's foremost scholars on Willa Cather and Great Plains studies," Hachiya said.

Architecture

Students registered in the College of Architecture at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln spend their first two years as pre-architecture majors and then must apply to the Department of Architecture to continue their education.

Students are accepted to the Department of Architecture based on their grade point average and portfolio, which contains drawings made during their first two years of school.

The College of Architecture has standards for admission to control the size of its enrollment. Figures from the admissions office list 364 undergraduates for the spring semester of 1989.

The low number of students in the college facilitates a community atmosphere, said Joseph Luther, assistant dean for the college.

"We don't believe bigger is better," Luther said. "It's quality, not quantity, that counts."

In spring of 1988, the National Architectural Accrediting Board declared UNL's College of Architecture as one of the top ten programs in the United States.

The college has an exchange program with several countries, including China, Germany and Ireland.

A $4.5 million renovation project was recently completed at the college. The renovation has given UNL the "best design facility in the nation," said Luther.

The architecture program has existed at UNL since 1894. In 1974 the program became a college.

Discrimination not tolerated at UNL

By Chris Tipton

Discrimination will not be tolerated at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, according to Affirmative Action Officer Bradley Munn.

"Once or twice a month, incidents of sexism/sexual harassment or racism are reported directly to this office (Affirmative Action Office)," Munn said.

Munn, who is also the Equal Employment and Education Opportunity Officer, said that the Affirmative Action Office handles complaints from any student who is employed by the university or who feels discriminated against in regard to education. The office is located at 127 Administration Building.

If students feel they have been unjustly treated in the hiring or termination process by any department or agency of the university, they can take their complaint to the Affirmative Action Office and an officer will conduct an investigation.

"Most of the complaints are informal. We try to come up with a reasonable resolution. However, some cases go to a formal resolution where I do a thorough written documentation investigation and a copy of the discrimination investigation goes to the chancellor of the university for final acceptance or rejection."

Munn said he thinks that most of the students are hired on the basis of their merit, not their personal characteristics.

In the case of a student being treated unfairly in educational opportunities, the officers would follow the same guidelines of trying to resolve the problem internally first. In some of the most serious cases, Munn said, he has had to recommend that the person not teach at this university when the case involved a faculty member. Most of these cases have involved substantiated acts of sexual harassment, Munn said.

Sexual harassment, a form of sex discrimination, can also be handled by the Affirmative Action Office or through the Sexual Harassment Consultant Network at 472-3872.

"We want to work through and resolve problems," Munn said, "because we don't want to end up in a courtroom or with a major problem. Well-meaning people can work things out."

"We want the environment to be barrier-free for students. If anyone were to suggest to them anything of a sexual nature -- we don't want that to happen. Every student can come forward and talk to a member of the Sexual Harassment Consultant Network or call this office."

Calls will be kept confidential, Munn said.
