DINOSAURS

year ago have paid off. Genoways said during the first six hours on Sunday when it was open to the public, 2,800 people came to the exhibit.

"We had people standing in the rain waiting to get in," Genoways said. "They were lined up all the way out to the street."

Genoways said he was surprised that the number of adults in attendance Sunday, especially the number of college-age people, was greater than the number of children.

"I didn't expect to see that, frankly," he said.

And Genoways said project coordinators anticipate many more visitors to the exhibit. He said he expects as many as 200 school groups to visit the exhibit before it leaves.

Genoways said the exhibit intentionally was scheduled to coincide with the Nebraska State Fair, so people from greater Nebraska could come to the exhibit.

Proceeds from the exhibit will be divided equally between Dinamation International, the Friends of the University State Museum and Folsom's Children Zoo.

Genoways said the museum will use the money to clean and restore the skeletons in the main hall. He said the display in "elephant hall" is the world's most comprehensive collection of prehistoric elephants, mastodons and mammoths.

"We're protecting an irreplaceable resource," Genoways said.

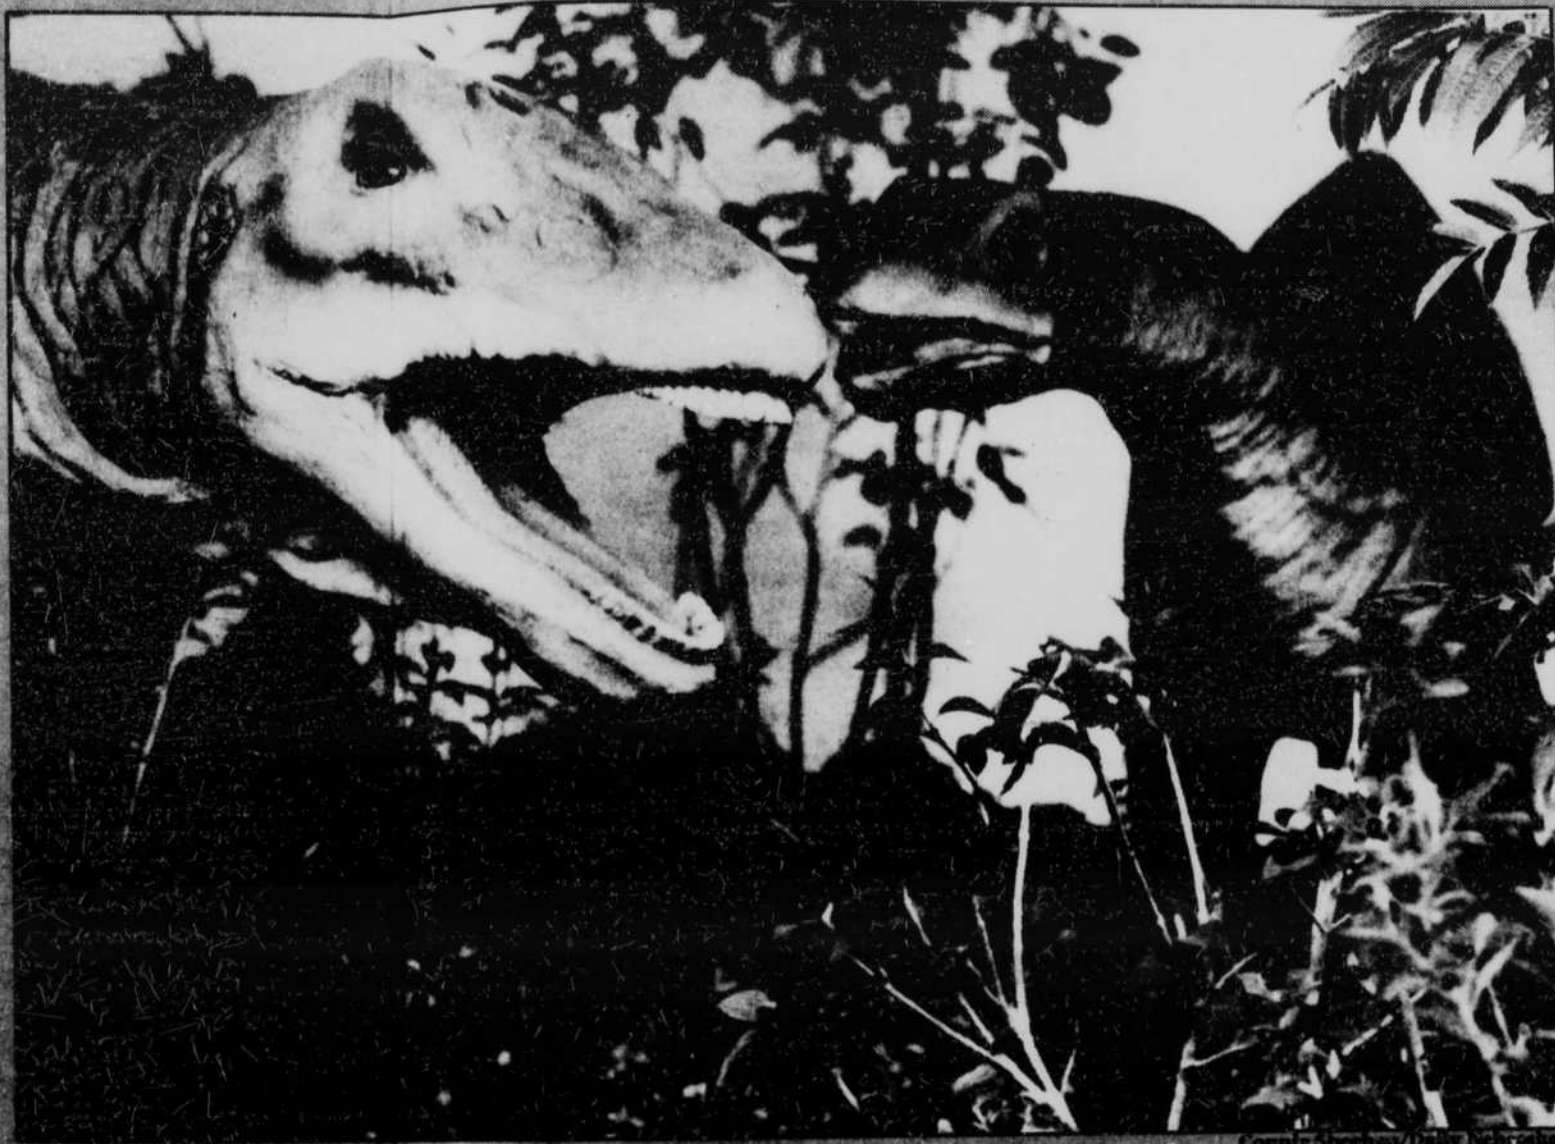

Chapo said the exhibit serves as the zoo's annual fund-raising event. He said in past years the zoo has relied on fairly common fund-raising themes, such as dinners and dances, to generate the money needed to care for the animals and property while the zoo is closed for winter.

"The board said, 'Let's do something different this year,'" he said. "This is something different."

The dinosaur exhibit fits the zoo's attitude toward serving the community, Chapo said.

"The Children's Zoo is a fun, hands-on learning zoo," he said. "At the Children's Zoo you can rub noses with the camels. At this exhibit you can rub noses with an Apatosaurus."

The exhibit is open from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Saturday and noon to 6 p.m. Sunday.

Top: Mother Apatosaurus gives baby a roar. The Apatosaurus weighed 30 tons and "mom" would have been 15 feet tall at the hip.

Left: Not all the smaller children shy from the growling and moving dinosaurs on exhibit.
