said. She said she makes $65 a month and would make more except she pays her older sister $35 to deliver the Sunday papers.

"I don't like to get up," she said.

During the week, the newspapers are delivered after school, but on Sundays the kids have to wake up around 5 or 6 a.m. to deliver the papers.

On Sundays, Matt said, he delivers papers by 6:30 a.m. and sometimes his dad drives him on his route.

"The breeze off Wedgewood Lake is really cold in the morning," he said.

His usual route during the week takes him about an hour, Matt said.

Because the Wednesday paper is larger than normal papers, Tom puts them in a wagon which he pulls down the street. He said it makes things difficult, because he usually takes a shortcut on his bike which involves driving down some stairs.

The Watton boys are paper-route veterans and have had their paper route for about one year in Lincoln. They also had a route in Hastings for two years when they lived there.

"We save three-quarters of the profits for college," Jason said.

And both have bought new bikes with their money and help from their parents.
