is linked with vagrancy, but Grieves says that many of the people she sees have simply fallen on hard times, and are trying to find jobs.

'You can't help them all, but occasionally you help to get one of them back on their feet again.'

—Grieves

David Hansen/ Daily Nebraskan

Verona Grieves, manager of Stone Soup, a soup kitchen and laundromat, opens her doors to the needy and hungry of Lincoln.

"Every day I see someone in the kitchen that I haven't seen before," she said. "Sometimes they'll be here for a few weeks, then disappear."

Grieves even has allowed some of her friends to sleep in her backyard, something that again has drawn complaints from neighboring businesses.

"You know, I've had college students vandalizing my back yard and leaving beer cans in my parking lot, but I never complained," she said. "And yet when one of (the) homeless persons urinates in the alley, people get outraged. Don't they understand that this is how these people have been forced to live?"

The Masters

Meet Modern

Familiar and stirring melodies by Mozart, Beethoven and other great masters of classical music merge with a colorful mosaic of movement in an evening of dance by The Lincoln Contemporary Dance Theatre. Modernism and Classicism unite in exciting diversity, from the haunting beauty of "The Moonlight Sonata" to the mischievous rondo from "Eine kleine Nachtmusik."
