

PROGRAM from Page 10
 phy is created by UNL dance faculty and visiting artists.
 The LCDT averages 12 performances a year.
 "We have amazing opportunities for students to perform," Milan said.
 "Last year we were in production the entire year."

The dance department also is affiliated with the community ballet company called Ballet Midwest-Lincoln City Ballet Company. The company usually puts on a performance in the spring in which the UNL dance department participates.

On the academic side of the dance program, two degrees are offered to students at UNL -- a bachelor of fine arts degree in dance and a bachelor of arts degree.

The bachelor of fine arts degree is for dancers who wish to perform professionally or go on to graduate school, Milan said.

UNL does not offer a graduate degree in dance.

If students choose to go on to graduate school, they may earn a master of art or a master of fine arts degree.

UNL's bachelor of arts degree focuses more on a liberal arts education instead of performing, Milan said. This major is for students who don't want to perform but who to teach dance, dance history and criticism, or study kinesiology, she said.

Some colleges allow dance students to receive an undergraduate degree as a ballet major or modern dance major. At UNL the dance program requires dancers to be proficient in all styles, Milan said.

"The type of degree received depends on the particular school," she said. "We have training in all areas of dance and a student may decide on an area of concentration."

It's important for a dancer to be proficient in all areas because professional dance companies are no longer as segregated in particular dance styles as they used to be, Milan said.

As in all the performing arts areas, it's important for university dance programs to have faculty with professional dance experience. Milan said UNL has a very good mix of experienced faculty.

She has a masters of arts in dance and dance education from New York University and has performed professionally with a number of modern dance companies in New York. This is Milan's third year at the university.

The new program director will fill her position this spring.
