Student volunteers fight to keep vehicles from residence lots

By Lisa Bolin
Staff Reporter

While thousands of fans fight to find a parking space before the last two Nebraska home football games, student volunteers will fight to keep unauthorized vehicles from parking in some residence hall lots.

Belise Draper, president of Sandoz Residence Hall at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, and Kelly Wade, president of Abel Residence Hall, said they have decided it is time to protect the precious parking spaces they paid for.

The students said they are upset because football fans illegally park in lots designated for residence hall students.

are shared with Area 1 permit holders, parking spaces are limited to the more than 1,500 students living in Abel-Sandoz, he said.

This problem increases considerably on home football game days when visitors, East Campus students and commuter students all want to find a space close to Memorial Stadium, Wade said.

Draper said her biggest concern is for the students who do not attend the games. Students wanting to leave campus must wait until after the game starts if they want a parking space when they return, she said.

Ron Fuller, UNL parking staff assistant, said the lots are enforced 24 hours a day. But parking officials only can issue citations for cars illegally parked in these lots because the lots are not designated tow-away zones.

Those parked on campus who qualify as visitors can write off up to two parking citations, Wade said. This basically gives people a free place to park during football games, he said.

Saturday, UNL parking officials supplied the group with four police radios to use in case they had any problems, Draper said.

Although a few motorists who were turned away were upset, the volunteers didn't experience any severe problems, Draper said. The group actually received a lot of positive feedback, she said.

Wade said the group was kept busy monitoring the lots.

Wade said he and Draper turned away about 20 cars from the lot east of Sandoz. He said he even had to chase a couple of cars that tried to sneak into the lot.

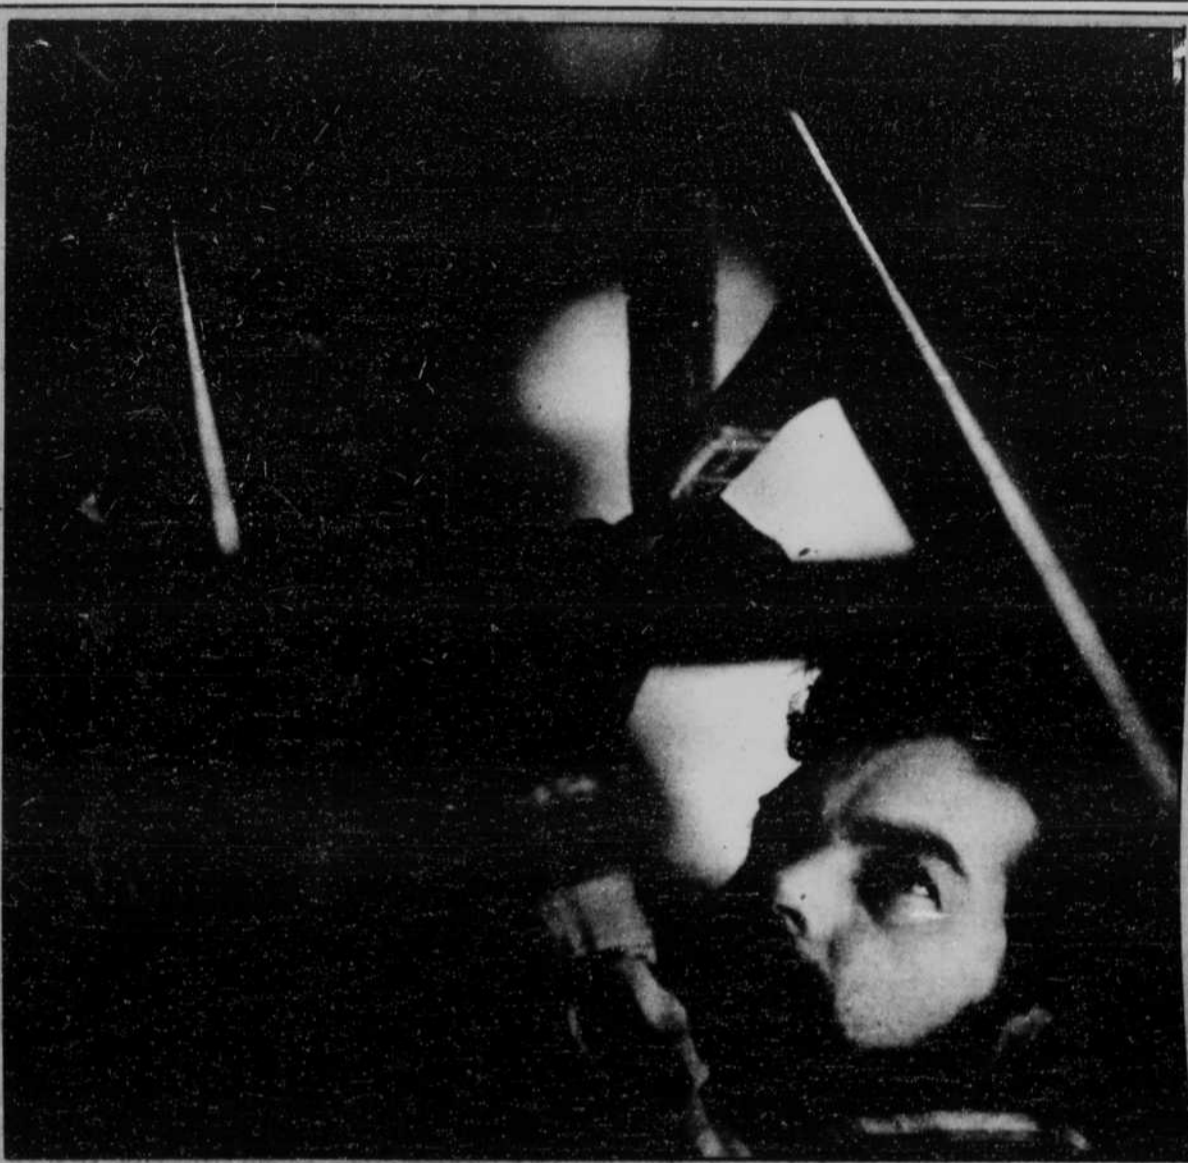

Hansen, a sophomore advertising major, said he and Koehler turned away 50 to 75 cars at the 21st and Vine street lot.

Draper said monitoring the lots was successful and spaces were available after the game started.

Draper and Wade said they are looking for more volunteers for the last two games.

Fuller said this was the first time anything like this had been tried and he encourages other residence halls to do the same.

"It's difficult for us to be everywhere at the same time," he said. "The volunteers helped us out as well as themselves."

ASUN to review Reunion beer plan

By Jana Pedersen
Senior Reporter

The Association of Students of the University of Nebraska will reconsider a resolution today that would support efforts to sell beer in the Reunion.

On Oct. 18, ASUN approved the resolution and then voted to send it back to committee after some senators expressed concern that it wasn't worded clearly.

Since then, College of Business Administration Sen. Bart Vitek, who introduced the resolution, said the Campus Life Committee has reworded the resolution "to strengthen some of the language and to make it more clear."

Changes include the addition of a clause stating that more than 50 percent of University of Nebraska-Lincoln students are of the legal drinking age, Vitek said.

He said the committee wanted to emphasize that if students of legal drinking age who live on campus have a place to drink on campus, they would not have to drink elsewhere and drive home.

A separate clause outlines that fact, he said. The clause states that allowing the sale of beer in the Reunion, a place to which students can walk instead of drive, promotes "responsible drinking."

Another clause, stating that UNL officials allow the sale of alcohol in Nebraska Union and Wick Alumni Center for special occasions, was not included in the revised version of the resolution, Vitek said.

He said it was left out, even though he thought it was "pertinent," because senators voted to remove a similar section in the original version.

Vitek said he thought senators would be satisfied with the second version of the resolution.

"I don't foresee any problems," he said. "The original did pass, so I'm pretty confident this new resolution will pass."

Reunion owners are applying for a license to sell beer in the food court area.

Plates stolen from vehicles in UNL lots

From Staff Reports

Fifteen license plates were reported stolen Monday from cars parked in University of Nebraska-Lincoln student lots, according to UNL Police reports.

One plate per car was taken from vehicles parked in the following student lots: Area 1 at 18th and R streets, Area 1 at 17th and R streets, Area 2 at 17th and R streets and Area 3 near Harper-Schramm-Smith halls.

The Area 1 lot, at 18th and R streets, was hit the hardest with 10 plates reported stolen.

The thief or thieves took both Nebraska and out-of-state plates, said Sgt. Mylo Bushing of UNL Police.

Bushing said UNL police are investigating the thefts.

New council to advise Griesen

By Jana Pedersen
Senior Reporter

Following the example set by the Business Services Advisory Council, UNL Chancellor Martin Massengale has set up a council to advise James Griesen, vice chancellor for student affairs, on student services at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

The Student Services Advisory Council is made up of four faculty members, three students and one representative from the Nebraska Alumni Association.

Coby Simerly, chairwoman of the council, said the group will try to fulfill guidelines established by Massengale and also work on its own ideas.

According to guidelines, Simerly said, the council will advise Griesen on policies related to student services, review student services procedures, and assist in developing a periodic review process for student services policies and procedures.

At UNL, student affairs involves student life outside the classroom, including admissions, scholarships and financial aid, multicultural affairs, housing, career planning and placement, and other areas, according to information provided by Griesen's office.

The Student Services Advisory Council could offer advice on student policies in any one of these areas.

For example, Griesen said, when debating proposed changes in the student code of conduct, he will receive input from the council and the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska.

The idea for a student services council arose from discussions with Massengale, other vice chancellors and members of the Faculty Senate, Griesen said.

"I think it became obvious that we have an area of campus where the faculty wasn't very involved," he said.

Griesen said several advisory committees currently exist on campus for different branches of the university.

"We had covered everything but student services," he said.

Griesen said he hopes the Student Services Advisory Council will be able to involve faculty in the decision-making processes of the student services area in the way that other committees like the Business Services Advisory Council have involved faculty in other areas.

John Goebel, UNL vice chancellor for business and finance, said that in the 1 1/2 years since the Business Services Advisory Council was established, it has been "invaluable."

"It's very, very satisfying to have a group of knowledgeable, well-informed people to get a reaction to changes," he said.

Goebel said the business services council has six voting members and advises him on issues such as computer sales and physical plant services.

Simerly said that when the Student Services Advisory Council met for the first time last week, members outlined two areas they want to address: involving faculty members in accomplishing student service objectives, and working with Griesen to identify issues and problems on campus.

ASUN President Bryan Hill, who serves on the council, agreed that increasing faculty involvement in the student services area will be a priority for the group.
