Sometimes students don't need legal help, Stall said. But "most every student that comes in thinks they need help."

Stall said the lawyers usually try to discuss problems with students to see if they need help.

In 1988-89, the office handled 1,065 cases, a 23 percent increase from the 821 cases in 1987-88. Stall said more advertising and an increase in referrals may have contributed to the increase.

"If a student is involved in a case and a judge or another attorney know they have free services available, they send them to us," she said.

Student Legal Services provides attorneys for students who can't afford them. Stall said anyone paying student fees is eligible for free assistance.

She said she handles "fee-generating cases" such as those involving personal injury and student suits. Stall said the office doesn't handle personal cases involving such things as opening businesses.

In the last year, the office has been handling more students with misdemeanor offenses such as driving with an expired license. But, she said, the increase probably is not because students are getting in trouble more, but because they are more aware of the office's services.

Stall said the number of driving-while-intoxicated cases also has increased in the last year. The trend to enforce DWI laws may be a factor in the increased number of cases the office has been handling, she said.

In the future, Stall said, she would like to have two full-time attorneys and expand guidelines to provide more services for students.

"If students could become more aware of their legal rights, they could avoid such problems that may require legal action," Stall said.

crease because of the federal minimum wage hike. Also, increases will be made in retirement plans and health insurance costs.

Next year's tuition rates again will increase 5 percent, he said.

Although housing officials have tried to cut costs by raising rental prices and leaving elevator repairs incomplete, students can expect an 8 percent increase in housing costs in the next year, Griesen said.

However, he said, UNL ranks seventh or eighth in housing costs in the Big Eight.

"We'll have a lot of things coming on," Griesen said. "We don't want you to think we've been spendthrifts, reckless with your student fees."

Hill said the ASUN budget will show a 2.9 percent increase over last year because of increased employee salaries, health care and retirement plans.

decade-low 19,309 undergraduates registered in 1987. Undergraduate enrollment increased slightly in both 1988 and 1989.

According to a study released by the American Council on Education last December, enrollments at colleges and universities continues to increase slightly despite smaller high school graduation classes in many states.

The U.S. Department of Education had forecasted a 1 percent enrollment gain for 1989, according to the council's study. UNL's enrollment was about equal with the education department's prediction, growing less than 1 percent.
