controversial issues.

The UPC Fund Allocation Committee has requested more than a 233 percent increase over last year in its budget.

In 1989, FAC requested $1,500, but had held $1,900 over from the previous year, Sherbeck said.

By mid-October all of this money had been allocated, Sherbeck said.

Sherbeck said some organizations' requests had to be denied this year because FAC didn't have the money. This year FAC has requested $5,000.

FAC provides money for programs sponsored by any recognized student organization, Sherbeck said. An organization can receive money from FAC once every four years, she said.

Sherbeck said FAC's budget is structured so that it can carry over unused portions of its budget to the next year.

"When we have a carry-over balance, that is great because it means we've helped everyone who needs help," Sherbeck said.

The lack of a holdover balance and the anticipation of increased requests has led to the requested $3,500 increase, Sherbeck said.

Kramer said he hopes students will attend the committee's meetings, ask questions and listen.

"I would encourage students to come out and voice their opinions because it's hard for 11 people to make decisions for 24,000," he said.

UPC has requested $214,802.26, up 21 percent from last year, or $5.16 per student paying Fund A student fees.

Bernard-Stevens' right to divide the amendment.

Bernard-Stevens then said that he is a "sincere sly fox," and that he substituted the amendment because he was afraid it would not be considered if Schmit's motion to suspend the rules passed.

Sen. Sandra Scofield of Chadron then moved to delay consideration on the bill until Wednesday, but senators voted against her motion.

By continuing debate on the division, Schmit said, Bernard-Stevens is using the system to his advantage.

"He made an end run, and we were all caught with our mouths open," Schmit said.

Labedz asked Bernard-Stevens why he hadn't shown the amendment, dated Jan. 12, to senators earlier.

"I may be a sly fox, but I'm not a fool," Bernard-Stevens replied, saying his amendment had a better chance of consideration by introducing it without senators' prior knowledge.

Bernard-Stevens finally decided he would divide his amendment into seven different amendments instead of 19, but this motion was denied by President of the Legislature William Nichol.

After Bernard-Stevens moved to overrule the chair, the Legislature adjourned until this morning.

Even though some of their friends tease them about the smell, the building's ventilation system helps keep the rooms fresh, he said.

Prior said that his day starts at 6 a.m. when he, along with Sherbeck and Henn, a junior mechanical agriculture major from Grand Island, feed the animals before going to class.

The three students also work after class and on some weekends, Prior said.

He said that he learned about the rooms from Sherbeck, who worked in the Animal Science Building but lived in Burr Residence Hall on East Campus.

Last fall they moved in, along with freshmen Mick Goedeken of Bellwood and Alisa Wood of Palmyra and sophomore Melanie Hornung of Raymond.

Prior said the men live in two rooms located next to each other, while the women have one room that is separated from the men's by a lounge and small kitchen.

The four men share one bathroom while the women share a bathroom on their end, he said.

Although it is inexpensive and convenient to live and work in the same building, the students said, living in a public building causes some problems.

From 7 p.m. Friday to 5 a.m. Monday the doors are locked, Prior said.

He said the six students have keys to get into the building, but if any of their friends want to come in they have to be let in by someone living there.

But both Prior and Sherbeck said they probably will live there next year.

"This is the cheapest way going," Prior said. "I'll have to graduate before leaving."

Galen Loseke, a UNL livestock operations manager and manager of the three apartments in the Animal Science Complex, said undergraduate students have lived in the building since 1987.

Loseke said the students must follow the same rules as students living in residence halls.

Not only do the students take care of the animals, he said, but they also are extra security for the building.
