 deadlier since their last time out. A whole hour of this could prove lethal. But rather than dealing the death blow, Jourgensen and Barker prolong the pleasant torture by slowing down and diversifying.
 Chris Connelly and The Grand Wizard guest on the album, adding some shrieking and rapping. Syncopated drums take a stronger role, as well as cathartic synthesizer riffs and subtle voice sampling.
 "So What," an anthemic punk cheer, bangs steadily along for more than eight minutes, keeping everything interesting with depressing lyrics about the sorry state of today's general societal attitude.

And ingeniously enough, the album closes softly with "Dream Song," a whispering ode to the odd. This industrial composite is a nice contrast to the obliterating style "The Mind" begins.

"The Mind" will have your cerebrum smoldering in seconds, whether it's wasted or tasted.

Try a couple of spoonfuls.
