Bush invites de Klerk and Mandela

WASHINGTON - President Bush expressed optimism Monday that South Africa's release of Nelson Mandela was a sign the country was "at last" on the way to ending apartheid, but he showed no inclination to move quickly to lift U.S. economic sanctions.

Bush noted at a news conference that the legislation imposing the sanctions against South Africa also prevents him from ending them until specified liberalizing measures are taken.

"What I want to do is discuss these provisions with Mr. Mandela and with Mr. de Klerk," he said referring to the freed black leader and to South African President F. W. de Klerk who ordered his release.

Bush noted that he had invited both men to the White House -- separately, with no times settled upon -- and he added, "I also want to see them continue to talk with each other. And then out of that, I think we'll have a much more realistic picture of what the United States might do in the future."

The sanctions, imposed by Congress over then-President Reagan's veto in 1986, severely restrict U.S. investment in South Africa and purchases of the country's exports.

Bush said a White House visit by de Klerk would be a "major step" in U.S.-South African relations and a more substantive gesture would not be appropriate until after the visit.

Earlier Monday, the assistant secretary of state for African affairs, Herman Cohen, had raised the possibility of an overture toward South Africa in return for the conciliatory steps de Klerk has taken.

Cohen, interviewed on NBC's "Today" show, said the administration is "rapidly reaching the point" whereby an easing of economic sanctions can be discussed because of the progress made thus far.

In answer to questions at a news conference, Bush said he finds some of the sanctions counterproductive and he played down the suggestion that they had a key role in inducing South Africa to signal interest in forging a more equitable political system.

"What's really changed is the mindset of the South African leadership," Bush said. "I think that we ought to give Mr. de Klerk certain credit for being able to look much more realistically about political change, and hopefully, more favorably about a society that eventually eliminates this racism that is equated with apartheid."

Bush, asked if he were uncomfortable with links between the Communist Party in South Africa and Mandela, said: "I'm not embracing every position of the ANC (Mandela's African National Congress). What I'm embracing is the concept that he's out of jail."

As for the U.S. sanctions, the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act stipulated that before they could be lifted, South Africa had to free all political prisoners and meet at least three of four other criteria.

De Klerk already has met one of the conditions by legalizing the African National Congress and other anti-apartheid groups.

On Capitol Hill, however, the 24-member Congressional Black Caucus issued a statement welcoming Mandela's release but calling any talk of lifting sanctions premature.

"Before any discussions of the lifting of America's economic sanctions can begin, the government of South Africa must be in compliance with the laws of the land," said caucus chairman Rep. Ron Dellums, D-Calif.

SAC opens doors to Soviet officials on three-state tour

OFFUTT AIR FORCE BASE - Ten members of the Supreme Soviet are coming to the Strategic Air Command headquarters in what is believed to be the first visit to the nuclear arms command center by officials of the Soviet legislature, officials said Monday.

The visit comes less than a week after President Bush visited SAC headquarters during a three-state trip to promote his defense spending plans.

The Soviets are members of the Defense and State Security Committee of the Supreme Soviet, the Soviet equivalent of the House Armed Services Committee, and are coming to the base near Omaha at the invitation of the House Armed Services Committee.

"In view of the increasing uncertainty surrounding events in the Soviet Union, I believe this is a particularly opportune time to host our Soviet counterparts," said Rep. Bill Dickinson, R-Ala., the U.S. House committee's senior Republican.

The Soviets will attend a SAC briefing and a question-and-answer session with Gen. John Chain Jr., SAC commander, said Capt. Julie Holland, a SAC spokeswoman.

SAC officials believe it is the first visit to the SAC headquarters by members of the Supreme Soviet, she said.

The visit to SAC headquarters near Omaha is part of a 12-day tour of U.S. military installations and scientific facilities that began Feb. 7, SAC officials said.
