Delving into Irish culture...

John Payne
Staff Reporter

Those interested in exploring their Irish heritage can take advantage of the recently-formed Nebraskans of Irish/Scotch-Irish Ancestry (NISIA), a club devoted to studying the history and culture of that land.

The group was formed Oct. 30, 1989, according to Evelyn Young, NISIA president. Young, along with Vice President Tom McFarland, jokingly said the number of people with Irish ancestry always increases around St. Patrick's Day.

"A lot of people tend to become Irish this time of year," she said. "We're Irish year-round."

Group membership has grown from 60 to about 116 in less than five months, McFarland said. "We've been amazed at how it has mushroomed. And with St. Patrick's Day coming up, interest should pick up even more."

NISIA publishes a quarterly newsletter for its members, holds meetings to assist members doing genealogical research, and has informal get-togethers.

The group has an "Irish Pub" party planned at the Villager Motor Inn & Convention Center, 5200 O St., for St. Patrick's Day, which will include two vocalists singing traditional Irish songs and lessons in Irish dance.

McFarland said the "Irish Pub" should attract many new members. "There are many myths that exist about Irish people," he said. "The Irish pub life, for instance is widely misunderstood in this country. The pubs are more social gathering places than the American bars."

"People will spend all night, often with their family, talking over one Guinness."
