he said. "If we do that, the hitting picks up and the pitchers give us solid performances, we have a good chance to win the Big Eight and go on to regionals."

Aside from a two-hit performance in a game against Kansas, Wolforth said he has liked what he has seen in the hitting department in the Huskers' last five games.

Nebraska's batting average stands at .224. To vie for the conference title, Wolforth said the Huskers must be in the .280 to .290 range.

"That'll be tough," he said. "But I think we're capable of that as a team."

Matranga said the 24-13 Huskers have put the Oklahoma series behind themselves even though they felt they could have done better. Nebraska suffered its 11-8 loss when the Sooners pounded Nebraska pitchers Paul Fanucchi, John Ofstun and Aaron Bilyeu for 12 hits, four of which were home runs.

"We weren't happy with what we did against Oklahoma," Matranga said. "But most of the players have already turned the page."

Nebraska baseball coach John Sanders said Matranga has turned the page on success by using an extensive arsenal of weapons.

"Dave is a thinking man's pitcher," Sanders said. "He is a pro-type, crafty lefty who has a multitude of pitches and is extremely competitive. He is well organized and has a definite plan to beat the hitter."
