

Student fees provide services

By Cindy Wostrel

About $6.8 million will help provide services next year for both new and returning students at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

That money will come from student fees, which students pay along with tuition.

Next year, full-time students will pay $155 in fees per semester, while part-time students will pay $70 per semester.

At UNL, those fees are separate from the cost of tuition, said Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs James Griesen.

Griesen said it is fairly customary for colleges to separate the cost of student fees from tuition, although a few schools like Iowa State University combine the costs.

Separating the costs has both advantages and disadvantages, he said.

By separating the costs, there is a greater sense of accountability for the providers of university services, he said.

"In a sense, these are taxes to people in the community," Griesen said, so students should know what they are paying for.

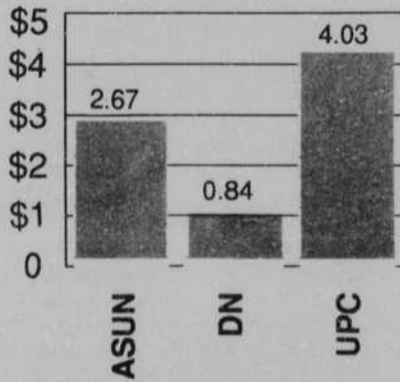

But by separating fees from tuition, some students lose money, he said.

Some employers may reimburse students for tuition, Griesen said. With UNL's system, those students end up paying for fees, he said, but if fees were included in tuition, students would
