Presidential search resumed

Committee advertises position, reviews candidates

By Cindy Wostrel
Staff Reporter

The search is on again for a new president for the University of Nebraska.

Duane Acklie, co-chairman of the presidential search committee, said the committee will begin to review candidates for the position June 29.

The candidates seek to fill the vacancy left when the NU Board of Regents fired former NU President Ronald Roskens last summer. University of Nebraska-Lincoln Chancellor Martin Massengale currently acts as the interim president.

The search committee, composed of 12 members and six ex-officio members, is advertising the position in the Daily Nebraskan, the Lincoln Journal and educational magazines, Acklie said.

The committee met once to ensure that the search observed minority rights and to decide how to encourage candidates to apply for the position, he said.

Acklie said he is unsure how many applications have been received thus far. But he said the committee expects to receive about 250 applications for the position.

It will probably take the committee about six months to review all the applications, he said.

The applicants don't need to be professional educators, he said. Anyone with outstanding skills in administration can apply, he said, but the committee will be looking at people with strong educational backgrounds.

Study reveals discrimination

By Mark Georgeff
Staff Reporter

A University of Nebraska-Lincoln faculty member said the administration has done little to prevent sexual discrimination against women faculty members and graduate students at UNL.

"There are some pockets of wage discrimination on campus that need some serious attention," said Helen Moore, professor of women's studies.

A UNL administrative study, issued Monday by the Chancellor's Commission on the Status of Women, revealed unequal women faculty and graduate student hiring, pay and promotion practices for the past 12 years.

The study reported that women faculty and graduate students' average salary was $600 less annually than their men counterparts, and the average rank of women faculty members at UNL was 1 percent for professors and 7 percent for associate professors below its peer institutions.

The study also indicated that the promotion rate for women assistant professors was 4 percent, but a 20 percent rate would have been accomplished over the 12 year period if the promotion rate was equal to that of men.
