UNL department receives grants

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln's department of Special Education and Communication Disorders has received two grants totalling more than $153,000.

Stanley Vasa, professor for the department, said the first grant, for $77,436, will help train teachers, sponsor a statewide conference for teaching assistants, sponsor a newsletter for teaching assistants and their school districts, and finance the development of materials for seminars.

The competitive grant is renewable for three years, he said.

"We're really excited," Vasa said, because this will allow the department to continue the work they have been doing.

Each year of the project, the department will have 10 stipends for teachers who will help train teaching assistants. The first year, the stipends will be used in North Platte, Vasa said, and in the second and third years the stipends will be used in other Nebraska cities.

The department will sponsor conferences in Kearney and Omaha for the assistants, he said. The department also produces a newsletter four times a year for the teaching assistants and the school districts that hire them.

The grant money also will go toward a three-quarters staff member who will work on the projects at UNL, he said.

A second grant of $75,597 will help support full-time UNL students who major in speech pathology or early childhood special education.

The project is designed to meet the need for well-trained personnel to serve preschool children with handicaps, said Marilyn Scheffler, co-director of the project and assistant professor of special education and communication disorders.

The uniqueness of the grant is that it trains people in the fields of early childhood special education and speech pathology to work together, she said.

The six graduate students in the program will take classes in both programs in order to have interdisciplinary training, Scheffler said.

The grant provides $1,350 for tuition expenses and $475 a month for living expenses for four early special education students and for two speech pathology students, she said.

Hungary

CBA administrative assistant Chris Gray said J. Clay Singleton arranged the Hungary program while in Europe last summer to search for universities with student-faculty exchange programs.

Gray said CBA also has student exchange programs with Oxford University in Great Britain and Senshu University in Japan. But those programs focus on undergraduate students, leaving a lack of international opportunities for UNL graduate students, she said.

Hamilton, a graduate student, said the summer study program will enhance personal and career experiences in the expanding overseas markets.

"I hope this will open the door to new opportunities for graduate students to study abroad overseas," she said.

"This program will help internationalize UNL's MBA program," she said.

Gray said CBA's student-faculty exchange program will be enhanced further by hosting a Hungarian exchange student sometime during the 1990-91 school year and by this summer's visiting professor Henri Huegel of Dijon, France.

Huegel will teach an international business course, primarily for MBA students, during the second five-week summer session, Gray said.
