question of who should be getting the ball by rushing for a career-high 124 yards on 21 carries. So Flowers, a junior from Omaha Central High School, could sit back and enjoy the performance of the reserves.

"It's good to see guys performing well at the position," he said. "The fullbacks did a good job today, too, and you like to see that."

Fullbacks Omar Soto, Tim Johnk and Robert Glantz scored their first career touchdowns in the second half. Nebraska amassed 424 yards on the ground and seven rushing touchdowns.

The Huskers needed that depth because Baldwin and starting fullback Lance Lewis were injured. Lewis went out with bruised ribs, nothing related to the pinched nerve in his neck that almost forced him to quit the team this fall.

Baldwin has a turf toe.

"That's disturbing," Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said. "It sounds like a minor injury, but for an I-back that could be pretty serious."

Luckily for the Huskers, they have running back depth and talent that Osborne has called possibly the best in his career at Nebraska. Osborne once had Mike Rozier and Roger Craig in the same backfield.

Flowers led this backfield Saturday, though he said the game felt average to him.

"It didn't feel like I had a 100 yards," he said.

He did, though, and despite the flashy performances from some young upstarts, he is still the leader of the pack.

Arnold Schwarzenegger to discuss fitness in Lincoln

Arnold Schwarzenegger, out to Terminate couch potatoes in this country, will be visiting the University of Nebraska-Lincoln later this month.

Bill Goa, an official with the Office of Campus Recreation, said Schwarzenegger, the chairman of the President's Council on Physical Fitness, champion bodybuilder and motion picture star, will be in Lincoln on Sept. 28.

Goa Recalled, Totally, that Schwarzenegger said he wanted to visit all 50 states to discuss physical fitness within two year's of being appointed chief fitness Commando. This is Schwarzenegger's first swing of states.

He's taking time off from the Red Heat of his movie career for a luncheon with the governor and a speech at a Lincoln public school.

Then he'll come to campus, with the Twin goals of touring the Recreation Center and talking to UNL students in the Coliseum. He'll tour the center from 2:30 to 2:45 p.m. and talk from 2:45 to 3:15, with a press conference afterward.

Goa said Schwarzenegger is being a Predator toward incomplete fitness programs; he has asked for specific information on programs in Nebraska.

"It's kind of impressive that he would take the time," Goa said.

About 4,000 students will be able to listen as Schwarzenegger encourages everyone to stay away from the ice cream Cone an' become a Running Man. Goa said the method of distributing tickets or allowing people to attend hadn't been decided yet.

First half carries junior varsity to victory

By Todd Cooper
Staff Reporter

You can't always get what you want, but you get what you need.

That line from the Rolling Stones' classic could have been the theme for the Nebraska junior varsity team's offense Friday at Memorial Stadium. Nebraska got all it needed in the first half, beating Snow (Utah) Junior College 14-7.

Both teams put up their points in the first half, but Nebraska's offense rarely threatened in the final 30 minutes. Nebraska racked up 127 of its 194 yards of total offensive yards in the first half.

"We got a little too conservative at times," said Cornhusker JV coach Bill Weber. "We tried to go with some of the things that were effective in the first half and they did a little better at stopping them in the second half."

Nebraska's fullbacks were the most effective in the first half. Kyle Emsick and Rick Blatny combined for 44 yards on nine carries, with most of those yards coming mostly on trap plays.

"We talked before the game, and the coaches said the trap should be there," Blatny said.

Emsick, a walkon from Lincoln Southeast High School, profited most from that game plan, gaining 25 yards on three carries. Emsick was the third fullback to enter the game.

"It felt great out there, the holes were wide open," Emsick said. "With their blitz, we knew the trap to the fullbacks was probably the best play."

In the second half, Snow began to figure out how to stop the Huskers' trap play.

"I think the reason (the traps didn't work) was Snow making adjustments at halftime," said Blatny, a walkon from Fairbury. "They were working sometimes but not as much as the first half."

The trap was less effective for scholarship recruit Cory Schlesinger. The freshman from Columbus High School started the game, gaining 24 yards on nine carries.

"I was running too straight up and down and was missing blocks," Schlesinger said. "I think I was hoping I didn't get hurt instead of playing football."

But Schlesinger said his apprehension will soon end.

"I didn't want to screw up," he said. "In college, when you screw up they just put somebody in front of you, where in high school it didn't really matter."

"It will come, it will just come."

JV football defense pressures Snow

By Todd Cooper
Staff Reporter

Constant pressure by the Nebraska

"We did a lot of stunting," said

Nebraska right tackle Jason Pesterfield after the 14-7 win at Memorial Stadium. "We felt the defensive ends and tackles had some pretty good pass rushes."

The Cornhusker line and linebackers had 13 hurries, three sacks six passes broken up and eight other tackles for losses.

It was a defensive battle, and Nebraska wasted little time showing that to Snow, Pesterfield said.

"It didn't take long; we really stuck 'em down the first series," he said.

Pesterfield's heavy rush had Snow's linemen moving early and being penalized.

"Three different guys jumped right in front of me," he said. "I never even made a move. . . I don't (know) if they were anxious to get a jump or what."

Snow quarterback Bret Barben completed 18 of 31 passes, but threw three interceptions at crucial times.

In a second quarter third-and-three situation at Nebraska's 15-yard line, strong safety Brian Pollard intercepted a pass and returned it 67 yards.

After Snow blocked a Nebraska punt in the second half and recovered it at the Nebraska 13-yard line, outside linebacker David Leader sacked Barben for a 13-yard loss. The next play, strong safety Travis Giesbrecht intercepted a pass to halt Snow's threat.

"We got off the ball real quick all day," said left tackle Scott Spachman, a walk-on from Kansas City, Mo., and whose brother, Chris, was a former Husker defensive tackle.

Nebraska junior varsity offensive tackle Jason Pesterfield (98) throws his hands up after tackling Snow running back Duncan Boyd behind the line of scrimmage during Friday's game.
