

Barrios kicks his way to Nebraska top-10 list

By Paul Domeier
Senior Reporter

Nebraska kicker Gregg Barrios entered the Cornhusker top 10 in career scoring Saturday with seven points against Iowa State.

Barrios said he didn't know about the accomplishment.

"I just want to concentrate on what I'm doing right now," the senior from Omaha said. I can look back at the end of the year and see what I've accomplished."

Barrios picked a lousy day to pass Rick Berns in the career scoring list. A strong wind, officially as 15 mph with 30 mph gusts, blew from the north to south end zones the entire game.

That caused some problems for the Huskers, who, for one of the few times this season, did not have a clear advantage in the special teams.

"Iowa State is one of the teams that really work on their kicking game," Barrios said.

Nebraska's Tyrone Hughes, who entered the game second in the nation with 36.6 yards a kickoff return, let kicks bounce past him twice, picking up the ball once for a three-yard gain, once for a one-yard loss. On his one punt return, Hughes was tackled at the Nebraska 2-yard line after a one-yard gain.

Most troubling for the Huskers, though, were Jon Schoor's punts. The Iowa State punter averaged 46.8 yards a kick and had punts returned from or downed on the Nebraska 1, 1, 2 and 12 yard lines.

Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said he didn't think he had ever seen a team kick with the wind and yet have the ball roll dead so well.

"I don't know if (Schoor) is part Houdini or if maybe he had some good fortune," Osborne said. "Probably both."

With the wind and the kicking difficulties, Nebraska's average drive in the first half began at the Husker 17-yard line, while the Cyclones started on average at their 38.

Barrios also had some problems, though not because of the wind. On his first extra point attempt, his right foot slipped when he tried to plant it for the kick. He skidded to the ground and chipped the ball between the goal posts.

"I was lucky to get it through," he said.

In the third quarter, Barrios made an extra point, but Nebraska was called for illegal procedure. On the second attempt, the kick was blocked.

That was Barrios' second miss in 122 attempts. Later in the game, Barrios added extra point No. 121 in 123 career attempts.

With 21 career field goals, including a 37-yarder into the wind Saturday, Barrios has 184 points. Berns, a Husker back from 1976-78, had 180 points. The next man for Barrios to pass is back Keith Jones, who scored 188 points from 1982-87.

"The good part is that you know a lot of things they can do as far as their strengths and weaknesses," Novak said. "The bad part is they are your friend."

The connections between the two teams don't end there. Novak also knew the Lady Buffs' Tina Murray and Jennifer Sherlock from volleyball camps, and Kohler played club ball against the Huskers' Eileen Shannon.

Kohler said she enjoyed playing Nebraska because it offered the Lady Buffs a chance to gain experience against a nationally-ranked team.

Experience is something the Lady Buffs could use. Coach Brad Saindon returned to the team two weeks ago after a two-year stint with the U.S. Men's Olympic Team.

"I think it's really tough adjusting to it," Kohler said. "But I think things will change in the Big Eight Tournament. Nebraska might be surprised with how we come out."

teammates, some of the freshmen got their feet wet for the first time as college swimmers. Katie Savage was one of those freshmen.

"It felt good to finally compete on the college level and I feel like I achieved my personal best score," Savage said. "After I accomplished my first college dive, my fears were taken away."

Diving coach Jim Hocking said that his divers were impressive this weekend despite their inexperience. "We have a lot of depth and strong divers which is impressive considering how young we are," Hocking said.

Aarson said the Cornhuskers got in more dives than they would in a regular meet.

"I was pleased with the overall effort of our team considering we were diving against our own teammates," Aarson said.

Looking over the results of the diving meet Hocking said that the men seem to be stronger on the 3-meter rather than 1-meter board.

"Curtis (Croes), Matt (Eastin), John (Arcaroli) and Curtis (Marti) are our top four divers and this weekend they proved it," Hocking said.

The women are more balanced on both boards, he said.

"I feel that if the Big Eight diving (meet) were in two weeks, that we'd sweep both the women's boards and maybe quite possibly sweep the men's, too," he said.

Kirby finished fourth in 24:55.6 minutes, 22.2 seconds behind the winning time.

"They won with little surges," Kirby said.

They took turns leading and sharing the workload, Kirby said, while he was forced to work alone, trying to keep up.

"Joe had a great race," Nebraska coach Jay Dirksen said. "Iowa State had three guys up there and they had to work as a team to beat him. Joe is a big reason why we do so well as a team."

Another reason might be David Itteffa who was the highest placing freshman in the meet. His 11th-place finish was the second highest for the Cornhuskers.

"He may be one of the best freshmen in the history of this school," Dirksen said.

The women's team didn't fare as well as expected. Coming into the meet as the defending champions, Nebraska needed an eighth-place finish by sophomore Fran tenBensel and a ninth-place finish by Lisa Graham to salvage a fourth place.

"I'm obviously disappointed about the women," Dirksen said. "We are a better team than we ran today, and I think the women know that."

The women's team includes one junior, three sophomores and three freshmen.

Inexperience hurt the team, Dirksen said.

The teams run next at the District V Championships Nov. 10 at Springfield, Mo., to determine qualifiers for the NCAA Championships at Knoxville, Tenn., on Nov. 19.

Colorado rolled up 484 total yards, 362 rushing, against Iowa State Oct. 13, the highest total by a Cyclone opponent this year — until Saturday. Nebraska finished with 557 yards on the ground, 624 total.

"Nebraska's a little better on offense," Walden said, "but Colorado's better than anything they've seen so far."

"Let's just say that, if they throw, it's just to give their pulling guards a rest," Walden smiled.

Weather often plays a role in Big Eight games, but Walden said he won't change his ways.

"I'm not going to the wishbone — to hell with that," he said. "I don't have the athletes to do what they're

Will the Huskers be able to run the option?

"I guess they will try," he said after a long pause. "You won't be able to run anything consistently against Colorado."

The Buffaloes held Iowa State to 219 yards on 58 plays. The Huskers gave up 317 on 57 plays.

Nebraska will definitely be tested, Walden said.

"What they're fixing to play next week is not the Sisters of the Poor. They will finally have somebody that's 'Somebody,'" he said. Next week they will play somebody."

(Nebraska) doing right now. That's what you run when you have your pick of the best in the country... and have five years to develop them.

"My guys don't stay here that long and I don't get the hand-picked out of my state. We just try to keep hope alive — and hope is alive with the ball flying around in the air. If we would have tried to run their offense against them, we'd be minus-72 yards rushing and the score would have been 67 to nothing."
