

Maui

I thought it would be nice to crumple the maps and leave them in my purse, in the car and all over my apartment.

My friends know I'm no good at photography, so I'll make up an excuse for no pictures. Either I accidentally exposed the film to light by opening it on the beach, or say "I thought all cameras were waterproof."

As far as the Yalie, I'll just coyly smile and say "who needs pictures." I've also decided to call Yale University and order an extra-large sweatshirt, spray it with Armani cologne and wear it with a smile the first day back to class.

For my friends that don't believe I left, I've gotten candles so the lights in my apartment are not seen at night, I won't answer the door for a week, and I've changed the message on my answering machine, complete with ukulele music.

"ALOHA! Sorry, I'm not home right now. I'm in sunny Maui, probably sipping a tropical blend of fruit juice with a native brown beach bum rubbing real coconut oil on my back. Having a great time — sorry to those that got stuck in old Padre AGAIN! ALOHA!"
