

Measles vaccinations available

A desire to avert another measles outbreak has spurred the University Health Center to offer students cheap vaccinations today and Friday, officials said.

Dr. Gerald Fleischli, medical director of the health center, said the immunizations are part of an effort to provide a second vaccination to students as they enter the university. The vaccine is provided to the center free from the state of Nebraska, keeping the cost to $7.50 for new students, he said.

Nora Ryschon, measles coordinator at the health center, said the National Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta and the American Academy of Pediatrics now are recommending that people receive two doses of the vaccine during their lives rather than one.

The health center has sent letters to all students who registered for the first time in the fall of 1990 or spring of 1991 informing them about the shots, she said.

The vaccine will be administered in the lower level of the health center today and Friday and April 4 and 5 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Ryschon said. New students — freshmen, graduate students and transfer students — who elect not to receive the immunization will be required to sign a waiver stating why they do not want the second dose, she said.

Ryschon said upperclassmen also can come in for a second dose if they have not had one, although they will have to pay $29.50.

"This is still a good price," she said. "At a doctor's office it's $40."

"I'd really like to see the student body get in and get their shots," Ryschon said. "It really is a cheap price."

Last year, about 10 measles cases were reported at UNL, and 50 were reported the year before that, Ryschon said. She said this year's inoculation effort has been timed to occur before students head off to Spring Break hangouts, where they seem to catch the disease.

"In the past the outbreaks we've had are right after Spring Break," Ryschon said. "We hope that they'll get it before they go somewhere like Padre or Daytona."

"It really is a serious matter. Other states have had students die on campuses," she said.

said outside displays are reviewed by his office and the general purpose bulletin boards are supervised.

He said he removes posters that are offensive and anything else hung in the building is none of his business.

There is no single university policy governing the use of bulletin boards or inside displays, according to Herb Howe, associate to the chancellor.

"My assumption is that the academic dean is responsible for the building," he said.

Cecil Steward, dean of the College of Architecture, said he does not screen materials put up on bulletin boards or doors.

Students put up the ribbon to recognize the six architecture students called up for duty, he said. It was not an act of the administration or faculty.

There are no plans to remove the ribbon. The students put it up, and they will take it down, Steward said.

Bill to ban borrowing out-of-state IDs advances

From Staff Reports

Borrowing out-of-state identification edged one step closer to being a crime Wednesday when a bill preventing it passed through second-round debate at the Nebraska Legislature.

LB335, which was introduced by Sen. Jacklyn Smith of Hastings, would make using another person's out-of-state operator's license or state identification card illegal.

It also would prevent using out-of-state identifications that have been canceled, revoked, suspended, fictitious or fraudulently altered.

Currently, it is illegal to use misrepresentative identification that has been issued in Nebraska.

Evans, retired professor, UNL alumnus, passes away

From Staff Reports

Bert Evans, a retired associate professor in the University of Nebraska-Lincoln economics department, died Monday at Lincoln General Hospital from injuries suffered in a March 10 traffic accident.

Evans, 69, of Bloomfield helped organize the Center for Rural Affairs in Walthill in 1973.

He ran on the Democratic ticket for the U.S. House of Representatives in 1958 and for the Nebraska Legislature in 1984, but lost both races. He retired from UNL in 1989.

Evans graduated from UNL in 1953 and went on to receive his master's and doctorate degrees from Harvard University.

The funeral will be at 2 p.m. Friday at First Trinity Lutheran in Bloomfield.

by a notary public as required by state law.

"It was not a document that would convey title," Johnston said.

Looking back on the events surrounding Cooper Park, a protester arrested last year said Wednesday that the demonstrators believed the city had no business building on land that didn't belong to it.

"One of the reasons the protestors were there is they believed the city had no right to contract . . . for the destruction of those trees or changing of the park," said Dave Regan, a University of Nebraska-Lincoln law student and member of Ecology Now.

"I think it's pretty sad the judicial system takes so long," he said.

Regan lamented that the trees couldn't be replaced.

"The best thing that came out of this is that city planners (will look closer) at potential consequences of environmentally harmful or unpopular decisions," he said.

political activity."

"I don't want to turn it (the resource center) into a political action room," Regan said.

The four groups would pool their resources to provide the resource center with a variety of periodicals, books, institutional publications, videos and computerized records relating to protection and appreciation of the environment.

"As an educational facility, we have to take it upon ourselves to cover the whole spectrum (of political orientations) from left to right," said Jack Lionburger, president of the Biology Club.

Committee members agreed, however, that specifics could be ironed out after the committee was notified as to whether it was awarded space in the union.

Regan said the Operations Committee will ask the Union Board on April 9 for 200 square feet of space for the resource center.

Until then, the committee will attempt to rally support for the center. The Association of Students of the University of Nebraska passed a resolution in support of the resource center Wednesday night.

"It's a big step," Jeff Riggert of Ecology Now said. "If we work together on this, we can turn the planet around."
