He'll spend some intense periods of the most crucial matches spinning his racket on his finger, an odd sight considering some of the psycho head-cases that populate collegiate tennis.

Nebraska coach Kerry McDermott would tell you that Mueller could be better than former Husker All-American Steven Jung, who was a senior in Mueller's freshman year and now is ranked in the top 500 in the world.

Watching Mueller, you can see what McDermott means. Mueller runs along the baseline, hitting stroke after stroke until, it seems, he tires of the point. Then he hits some unbelievable winner.

Each year his game suffers a bit after months of play on American hardcourts. Then he goes back to his native clay courts, sharpens his game and returns. That means this is slump time for Mueller, and he lost his first two conference matches.

Wednesday, though, he beat Anders Karlsson of Iowa State. He will have a true test Sunday against Craig Wildley of Kansas. His two early losses put him in a bad spot for seeding at the conference tournament, but he has as good a shot as anyone at the title and a second individual NCAA tournament bid.

Watching Mueller play is a pleasure. The only frustrating part is knowing that he could do better — winning the Big Eight and breaking into the top 20 — and realizing that his first three years have gone by so quickly.

Huskers prevail despite mix-up

Playing a day early didn't keep the Nebraska men's tennis team from picking up a key conference victory at the expense of Iowa State.

A scheduling mix-up forced the Cornhuskers to play the Cyclones on Wednesday, rather than Thursday, as originally expected. That didn't stop the Huskers from easily defeating the Cyclones 7-2 in Ames, Iowa.

Nebraska coach Kerry McDermott said he was pleased with the victory.

"I felt pretty good with the match," McDermott said. "I think we could've beaten them by more than we did, but I'll take the win."

Nebraska improved to 2-1 in the Big Eight and 9-4 overall. The Huskers have 15 points after three conference matches.

McDermott said he was impressed with No. 1 singles player Matthias Mueller's victory over his Cyclone counterpart.

"I think Matthias is coming around and is starting to play some quality tennis," McDermott said.

Other Husker victories included singles wins at No. 3 Scott Randolph, No. 4 Joey Salerno, No. 5 Karl Falkland and No. 6 Anthony Kotarac.

The wins for Randolph and Salerno were their second ones in the Big Eight. Kotarac, who was questionable for the start of the conference season with a sprained ankle, is 3-0 in Big Eight singles play.

Mueller and Randolph won at No. 1 doubles, as did Falkland and Steve Barley at No. 3.

McDermott said the match was good preparation for Nebraska's matchup Sunday with conference-leader Kansas.

"We needed this win going into the Kansas match," McDermott said. "It will help us feel like we're ready to compete this weekend."

Before playing the Jayhawks, Nebraska will play Missouri on Saturday. The match against the Tigers will be the Huskers' conference home opener, while Sunday's battle with Kansas will be Nebraska's Big Eight home finale.

NU women burn up court at ISU

The Nebraska women's tennis team earned its first Big Eight team victory Wednesday, beating Iowa State 7-2 in a match played in Ames, Iowa.

Due to the early morning cold weather, the teams were forced inside and had to start play with the doubles matches, but were allowed to play singles outside when the sun began to warm the campus.

At that point Nebraska was already hot, having won all three doubles matches en route to the victory over the Cyclones.

Cornhusker coach Bob Hampton said he was happy to get the win, the first conference victory for Nebraska in three tries.

"I feel pretty good about the win," Hampton said. "Right now, the team's morale is really high."

Heidi Junius, who plays No. 3 doubles with Tina Coutretsis, agreed with Hampton about the Huskers' enthusiasm.

"The team is very happy and excited," said Junius, who won by scores of 6-2, 2-6, 6-2 with Coutretsis. "The win has brought out a stronger sense of team unity, and it will help us out this weekend."

Junius is referring to this weekend's battles against Missouri, Kansas and Kansas State, Nebraska's last home matches of the year.

Rachel Collins, who swept by her Cyclone opponents 6-0, 6-0 at No. 3 singles and 6-2, 6-3 in No. 1 doubles with Nancy Tyggum, said the squad is improving.

"After each match, we're getting better and better," Collins said. "Right now, we're on the right track."

The Huskers also received singles wins from No. 1 Ildiko Guba, No. 3 Tyggum and No. 6 Meghan Quinn. Guba and Ann Flannery were victorious at No. 2 doubles.

Nebraska improved their conference record to 1-2 and raised their total Big Eight points to 10.
