'Oscar" is a hilarious ride, full of belly laughs and hard-fought happy endings. Amazingly enough, the mess is resolved, with a few unexpected twists - even though the old man's dying request is not honored.

On the whole, "Oscar" is well worth the time and the cash.

Cavedogs

The voice is really that pure and grunge. The key to The Cavedogs sonic perfection lies in simplicity. Band members say they feel the band will do fine, as long as they don't learn any more chords.

"Yeah. Yeah. As long as we don't get too damn fancy," Rivers added. "You know, we are a three-piece. If you do too much of the three-piece, you start to become Rush," Rivers explained, giggling. "Joyrides for Shut-Ins," The Cave-dogs' debut, is actually a collection of demos. The songs have been cleaned up, and a couple have been re-recorded by Ed Stasium of Smithereens, Soul Asylum and Ramones fame.

The band doesn't seem to mind the release of its demos. In fact, members are pretty adamant in retaining the rougher, original sound, Rivers said.

"We always did them with the intention of 'let's do them so we don't have to come back and record another tired version." Let's get it right while we like the song," Rivers explained.

The story behind the release of Joyrides For Shut-Ins" is involved. Originally Enigma Records was going to release "Joyrides" last spring, but decided to release it in August.

The band was disappointed, to say the least.

"'Oh man. Really? We've gotta sit around ... hang out at our day jobs for that much longer?"" Rivers said.

The Cavedogs convinced Enigma to record an EP to release to college stations. The then four-song EP was the music borders masterfully on completed too soon after the release of the album, so it was never released. Until now > Recently, Enigma Records went to that place in the sky that all defunct record companies go to when they pass on. However, The Cavedogs didn't have to go with them.

> Capitol Records picked up The Cavedogs' option and re-released "Joyrides For Shut-Ins" last month. That was where the EP came to see light.

> "It (the EP) never really got released. So, when we did the Capitol thing, they needed something to give the record another life," Rivers said.

Released as an EP featuring a dif-ferent version of "Tayter Country," the six-song EP full of five new and unreleased tracks should be in stores any day

With an endless list of listening faves, The Cavedogs' influences seem as endless as its possibilities.

"MC Hammer. Let me tell you. He's our favorite labelmate," Rivers joked. "I'm probably truest to the power-pop stuff. We listen to everything from Fugazi to Abba," grunted Rivers in his best Casey Kasem voice. An Abba rebirth, then?

"God . . . We can only hope so," Rivers chuckled.

Another Cavedog release soon? God . . . We can only hope so.
