Color. At ASUN's first meeting in 1992, the senate will vote on whether to keep the subcommittee.

If the senate does not keep the subcommittee, the commission will work to find an acceptable solution for both ASUN and minority students.

If at any time the commission doesn't fulfill its directives, the subcommittee will immediately come to a vote before ASUN.

Thomlison said the reason for the immediate vote stipulation is to "prevent ASUN from dropping the ball."

Pat Jilek said he thinks the subcommittee is a "worthwhile cause."

"(Minority students) set the criteria for renewal," he said.

In other action, ASUN passed a bill instructing the Government Liaison Committee to lobby the Nebraska Legislature for support for the Beadle Center, higher faculty salaries, a minimum increase in tuition and student input on the strengthened Coordinating Commission for Postsecondary Education.

College of Business Sen. Heidi Putensen said the George W. Beadle

Center for Genetics and Biomaterials Research is not an issue of student interest.

"It's not a student issue as much as an administrative issue," she said.

GLC Chair Andrew Sigerson disagreed, saying it is important for ASUN to keep pressure on the Legislature.

ASUN President Andy Massey also said it is important for GLC to lobby over the summer.

"Otherwise," he said, "you're holding up three months of action."

Thomlison said the bill left the breadth of lobbying activities somewhat open to GLC because ASUN will not be meeting over the summer to react to problems that might arise.

The senate also passed a resolution asking Interim Chancellor Jack Goebel and other university officials to voice their opinions to Gov. Ben Nelson about appointing a student to the Nebraska Coordinating Commission for Postsecondary Education.

On April 24, ASUN failed to pass a similar amendment to a resolution encouraging Nelson to appoint a student.

College of Business Sen. Rob Broomfield introduced the bill.

"This shows (ASUN) has already taken action . . . and just asks for support," he said.

MASA

norities was released. The report recommended increasing the number of minority faculty members and students at the university.

Goebel said the report's suggestions will take time to implement.

"We have a report in front of us. Trying to get it operational is going to take some time," he said. "Some of these issues you simply can't resolve in six months."

"We're going to take the minority report and decide where we have been and what needs to be done."

But MASA President-elect Emilia Juárez, a senior Spanish and English major, told Goebel that Mexican-American students want to see results from the administration.

"We would like more of an active participation by the administration," she said.

One of the ignored issues, the protesters said, is the small number of Mexican-American faculty members.

Ness Sandoval, a junior business administration major and MASA member, said there are five Mexican-American faculty members at UNL.

"That's the same number as in 1977," he said.

Sanchez said there needs to be active recruitment and retention of Mexican-American faculty members at UNL to provide role models for students.

UNL does not have a Mexican-American community, Sanchez said, and many Mexican-Americans feel isolated.

Sandoval said one Mexican-American faculty member is transferring to Ogden, Utah.

"They came here and recruited him. There was a huge demand from the Chicano students there," Sandoval said.

established during former Gov. Kay Orr's administration.

"The particular (joke) issue probably would have been removed," he said. "Nothing against the editorial board or staff, but because of our sexual harassment policy" the joke issue may not have been allowed for distribution.

Brian Rockey, a spokesman for Gov. Ben Nelson, said it was his impression that the department possibly was trying to eliminate a direct connection between the state and the university.

"If a citizen or visitor sees it (the joke issue), they get the impression it's directly related to the state," he said.

Dan Shattil, DN general manager, said he received a telephone call late Tuesday morning from an administrative services official asking that the papers not be distributed in the Capitol and State Office Building any longer because of the joke issue.

Shattil said the Daily Nebraskan has been delivered to these locations for at least nine years.

"We usually get complaints that there are not enough papers at these locations," he said.

Shattil said he has decided to continue service to the two locations through the week unless conditions change.

Eric Pfanner, Daily Nebraskan editor, said it was clear that the policy change was based on the joke issue.

"I was pretty shocked. There is no grounds to justify banning based on one issue," he said.

Pfanner said he called the Student Press Law Center in Washington for legal advice and that a legal intern at the center stated the issue was one of censorship and a violation of the First Amendment.

The intern told Pfanner, he said, that the decision violates distribution rights and that the decision to remove the papers probably differed from a "time, place and manner restriction," which is legal.

State Sen. David Landis of Lincoln said he wrote a letter Wednesday to the Department of Administrative Services that suggests the Daily Nebraskan, other than the joke issue, is "newsworthy and serves a journalistic purpose." Pfanner said there are other long-term solutions to the problem, such as legal action, but that the administrative services office may realize the legal violation and reverse its policy.

UNL group wins at meat evaluation

From Staff Reports

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln Meat Animal Evaluation Team won the overall title at the recent 20th Northwestern Meat and Animal Carcass Evaluation Contest in Twin Falls, Idaho.

The UNL team also won the contest's Market-Breeding and Carcass divisions.
