Asian works of art displayed at museum

From Staff Reports

More than 100 works of art will be displayed at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln's Lentz Center for Asian Culture in an exhibit titled "The Diversities of Asian Arts and Crafts."

"This showing is unusual in representing both the private collections of Asian Arts and Cultural members and works from the guild's permanent collection," said Kam-Ching Leung, UNL professor of astronomy and curator of the exhibit. The guild was established in 1982 to share knowledge of Asian arts and cultures and to help establish the Lentz Center.

Leung said that to give a sampling of the diversity of Asian culture, he arranged works by art form rather than by age or country. Art forms displayed include painting, ceramics, lacquer works, metal crafts, textiles, prints and contemporary crafts. The showings of ceramics and lacquer are especially complete, Leung said, with every major Chinese dynasty being represented by ceramic works and with Japanese lacquer pieces displayed.

Metal works displayed include a gambling chip from China's Song Dynasty, bronze arrowheads dating from 475 B.C., ancient Asian coins, tiny bronze animal figurines from the eighth century B.C. and Japanese swords.

The display is open and free to the public until October in the Lentz Center, 329 Morrill Hall, 14th and U streets.
